THIS Company is one of the oldest,

and among the most prudent and successfully conducted in the country, being engaged in conducting its business has been to provide perfect security under all conceivable circumstances, for the payment of its losses under its policies, and to return to the surplus at stated periods, and strict economy is observed.

Every insured person is a member of the company and shares in the profits of the business, and is subject to no liability or responsibility beyond the premium.

The directors are required to be particularly interested in the company, and they give it their personal attention; and bonds of sufficient security are given by the officers for the faithful performance of their duties.

Insurance may be effected for the benefit of the wife, which is secured to her by law beyond the reach of a husband's creditors; and creditors may insure the life of a debtor.

Highly Important to Farmers.

THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE FARMERS' INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WEST.

THE MADISON MUTUAL.

LOCATED AT MADISON, WISCONSIN.

THIS Company continues to take risks upon Farm Property only, consisting of buildings of all kinds, (belonging to farmers,) household furniture, grain in barns, live stock, &c., from one to five years, at lower rates than any other responsible company.

All losses promptly paid at the office as soon as proof is made thereon.

We believe it to be for the interest of the farmers to insure by themselves, the property being more valuable than any other, consequently you will have no losses only your own of the same class, and all will be on an equal footing.

Experience has shown that two-thirds, if not three-fourths of all the fires that occur are upon stores, taverns, mills, shops and such like property. In this company all such property is rejected positively, by LETTER, and must be insured elsewhere.

Farmers, look to your own interest, and insure in a Farmers' Company.

We have been doing business a little over three years, and we have not been obliged to furnish a premium note, and for the last fourteen months we have not had a single dollar loss, though doing a large and prosperous business, which we believe to be without a parallel in the history of insurance.

The best of references given as to the responsibility of the company.

New England Mutual Life Ins.

Of Boston, Mass., Chartered in 1843, Capital and accumulation, $650,000.

THIS Company is one of the oldest, and among the most prudently and successfully conducted in the country. The primary object in conducting its business has been to provide perfect security under all conceivable circumstances, for the payment of its losses and the return of its surplus at stated periods, and strict economy is observed.

Every insured person is a member of the company and shares in the profits of the business, and is subject to no liability or assessment beyond his premium.

The directors are required to be peculiarly interested in the company, and they give their personal attention; and bonds of sufficient security are given by its officers for the faithful performance of their duties.

Insurance may be effected for the benefit of the wife, which is secured to her by law beyond the reach of a husband's creditors; and creditors may insure the lives of debtors.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS, President; B. F. STEVENS, Sec'y; CHAS. PULKER, Agent.

Highly Important to Farmers.

THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE FARMERS' INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WEST.

THE MADISON MUTUAL,

LOCATED AT MADISON, WISCONSIN.

THIS Company continues to take risks upon Farm Property, consisting of buildings of all kinds, (belonging to farmers,) household furniture, grain in barns, live stock, etc., from one to five years, at lower rates than most other responsible companies.

All losses promptly paid at the office as soon as proof is made thereof.

We believe it to be for the interest of the farmers to insure by themselves, their property being less hazardous than any other, consequently you will have no losses only your own of the same class, and all will be on an equal footing.

Experience has shown that two-thirds, if not three-fourths of all the fires that occur are upon stores, taverns, mills, shops and such like property. In this company all such property is rejected positively, by letting them alone.

Farmers, look to your own interest, and insure in a Farmers' Company.

We have been doing business a little over three years, and we have not been obliged to assess our premium notes, and for the last fourteen months we have not had a single dollar loss, though doing a large and prosperous business, which we believe to be without a parallel in the history of insurance.

The best of references given as to the responsibility of the company.

Highly Important to Farmers.
THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE FARMERS' INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WEST.
LOCATED AT MADISON, WISCONSIN.

THIS Company continues to take risks upon Farm Property only, consisting of buildings of all kinds, (belonging to farmers,) household furniture, grain in barns, live stock, &c., from one to five years, at lower rates than most other responsible companies.

All losses promptly paid at the office as soon as proof is made thereon.

We believe it to be for the interest of the farmers to insure by themselves, their property being less hazardous than any other, consequently you will have no losses only your own of the same class, and all will be on an equal footing.

Experience has shown that two-thirds, if not three-fourths of all the fires that occur are upon stores, taverns, mills, shops and such like property. In this company all such property is rejected, and insured by Farmers' Company.

We have been doing business a little over three years, and have not a single fire upon our books, and we have not had a single dollar loss, though doing a large and prosperous business, which we believe to be without a parallel in the history of insurance.

The best of references given as to the responsibility of the company.

LAST TRIBUTE OF CHATEAUX-ROUX.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

[Concluded from yesterday.]

The count received the procession with stately courtesy, as his predecessors had done for many generations. The widow of Chateaux-roux then offered to kneel before the count in token of submission; but he gracefully prevented her, and, raising his plumed hat, saluted her according to the fashion of the time, by ceremoniously kissing her on each cheek, and without knowing her story, he gazed with interest on her beauty, as she modestly performed her part in pageant by presenting herself in the name of the inhabitants of Chateaux-roux with the usual commendation for their tax.

The count answered the beautiful bride—whose sorrows he guessed not—courageously, and more graciously and kindly than he had been wont to treat her predecessors: a stout, cherry-cheeked dame, who on such occasions had always appeared to feel herself a person of the utmost importance. Then drawing off his left glove, and holding it by the points of the fingers in the right hand, he raised it, and striking lightly the vase of roses on Lucille's head, already loosened by her attendant maidens, it fell to the ground, and was dashed to a thousand pieces, while the band struck up a triumphant air, and the crowd cheered loudly.

All the members of the procession, and also the count, maintained their places, waiting until silence should be restored, that the lord of Chateaux-roux might, according to custom, declare the tax remitted for the past year. But just as the last strains of the music were dying away, and the count had raised his hand to speak, the hitherto passive bride shrieked wildly. It seemed to her excited mind that the pale, was shade of one long dead stood before her; and welcoming it as a message from the other world sent to free her from the heavy burden of life, she sprang quickly forward; and crying, "Claude! Claude! take me with you!" threw herself on the stranger's bosom, while the bridal veil swept over both, and the wreath of orange blossoms fell on his breast.

But it was a living and loving heart on which Lucille cast herself, though she had so long believed it cold and still. For it was another Mornand who had fallen beneath the dagger of a stranger, though owing to the confusion at that time reigning in Paris, it had been erroneously stated to be Claude Mornand of Chateaux-roux; while Claude himself, arrested the very evening of his arrival in Paris, as an accomplice in some conspiracy, of whose very existence he was ignorant, had for three years suffered a living death in one of the crowded prisons of Paris, unable to send a single word or token of his safety to her he loved. At length, after many difficulties and dangers, he had escaped with the Count of Lienne, had conducted him to Chateaux-roux, and was on his way to seek Jean Pauline, and bid him break the tidings of his safety to Lucille, when she rushed forward and threw herself into his arms.

"I congratulate you on your return to life and to your friends," said Jean Pauline, approaching Mornand. "Yes, and to one of the best of wives and mothers, notwithstanding this veil," he added, raising the veil which Mornand had refrained from touching. And he related in detail to him the persecution by which Lucille had become a second time a bride.

"Kindly treatment, in truth, for the widow and the fatherless!" said Mornand bitterly; and when some of his former acquaintances came, not without embarrassment, to welcome him back, he turned from them indignantly.

"And now, Monsieur le Comte," said Pierre Baudouin, soon after the conclusion of the last scene, in which the count had shown a great interest, "will it please you to declare the tax remitted for the year?"

"It is not remitted," coldly answered the lord of Chateaux-roux, the graciousness he had evinced throughout the morning having vanished at the sight of the stately form of Albert Rohan mingling in the crowd. "The conditions on which alone exemption was granted have not been fulfilled, and the tax remains in force."

"But we cannot fulfill them," said Jules Soyer, eagerly. "We have done all we could do to compass it; and it is not our fault that, after all, Madame Mornand was not a widow."

"No; I doubt not that, for your own interests, you would as willingly have made her a widow as a wife," said the count ironically. "But know that it is not for this deed, nor for others not much better," he haughtily added, glancing towards Albert, "that you need expect favor at the hands of the lord of Chateaux-roux."

"Favor!" echoed from lip to lip, but reached not the count's ears.

"Therefore, on the morrow my steward will proceed to the examination of your property, and the collection of the tithe of its value," resumed the count, loftily addressing the assembled burghers, who stood in silence of astonishment at the extent to which the count was about to push his claim, "which," and Albert fancied the noble's eye again fell on him, "will form the dowry of my cousin, Mademoiselle de Bousset, on her approaching marriage with the Count de Trouville."

Albert Rohan felt his blood boil at this last remark; and he did many an other at the insulting scrutiny and loss with which his property was threatened.

"Men of Chateaux-roux, will you bear this?" exclaimed Albert Rohan.

"Never! never!" cried twenty voices from the younger portion of the crowd.

"We bore too much when we stood by and saw a woman sacrificed to save the gold for which our fathers toiled!" said one of them.

"Better have broken the yoke at once, and freed all from such bondage."

"I don't see why the count should take advantage of our misfortunes," muttered Baudouin, suddenly becoming an advocate for equity.

"Shame on you if you submit to it!" cries a bold spirit in the crowd. "Shall the men of Chateaux-roux alone be slaves, with all other Frenchmen free?"

"We will be free! we will be like the other men of France!" burst in an almost unanimous response from the more youthful burghers.

"Let us seize the castle, and revenge all our wrongs upon the count!" cried one, whom in other days the lord of Chateaux-roux had treated with injustice. "He has been a hard master to many of us, and we have nothing but evil to repay to him."

"Stop, stop!" cried Albert Rohan, "the liberty which is stained with blood will never last."

"What would you have us do?" said one among them.

"Come to terms with the count, agree to pay him a reasonable price for his lands, and have done with this mockery of tribute-paying forever."

"We will not pay him a single franc," replied the people; and loudest among those who demanded freedom for all, were Pierre Baudouin and Jules Soyer.

man who that morning had stood unharmed and honored among them.

Albert and his more considerate companions followed them, seeking opportunity to soothe the storm. But Rohan had another and far weightier reason; he was in agony at the thought of the alarm Claude would endure, and the rude shocks she might encounter in a castle filled with men infuriated against her class and kindred.

He had passed through a considerable part of the castle, trying in vain to prevent the crowd from destroying the pictures and furniture that filled the rooms, when he heard the voices of several men sternly demanding where the count was and promising safety to some one if his hiding-place should be revealed.

"But I know not where he is," replied a sweet voice, whose every tone thrilled on Albert's heart, and he immediately sprang forward to the aid of Clarice de Bousset.

With little difficulty he freed the terrified girl from her interrogators, and by means of a secret passage, to which Clarice had been hastening when the men arrested her, they made their way out of the castle on the farther side, where all was tranquil as of old. Hurrying along a lonely pathway to the town, whose deserted streets contrasted strangely with the scene of disorder they had quitted, Albert sought at once his mother's house, and confided Clarice to her care. Then, urged by the terrified girl's fears for the fate of her cousin and his gentle countess, he hastened back to the castle, from which the sounds of the tumult rose high on the summer air.

As he crossed the court-yard he met Jean Pauline escorting the countess, who was weeping bitterly, and entreating the life of her husband. But though no one answered her prayer, the majority stood aside with their heads uncovered and the deepest respect in their manner. With all their new-born hatred of her class, they could not forget that she had always been the friend of the poor and suffering.

Within the castle the hand of destruction had been already busy, and deafening shouts of men infuriated by their work of ruin, greeted Albert on every side. No tidings of the count's fate reached him, and he began to hope he had escaped, when, as it grew dark, a loud cry of triumph broke suddenly on his ear. He guessed at once its cause, and, hurrying on, found the lord of Chateaux-roux disarmed, in the hands of a couple of fierce peasants, who had just dragged him from behind the tapestry of an unused chamber. One held an axe uplifted to strike, when Albert, springing forward, caught his arm, and wrenching the weapon from him, pushed him staggering some paces back.

"Who are you that dares to come between my vengeance and the man who has wronged me?" demanded the peasant—the same who had first suggested the attack upon the castle.

"No matter who I am," said Albert, stepping before the count, who had shaken off his other captor. "I stand not by to see murder done; and you shall take my life ere you have his." It was not until within a room furnished sumptuously almost as his own castle, that the count, freed from immediate danger, seemed to recover from its paralyzing effects.

"Yes, I also owe my life to this brave youth," said he to Clarice, who came to welcome him to safety; and now, poor and fugitive like my brother nobles, an exile's life is before me. And yet," he added, turning to Albert, "I believe I have that which will repay all I owe to you." Albert flushed at his very bold, and glanced at Clarice. "Monsieur le Count, you know well what I dare not ask."

"It shall never be said that a lord of Chateaux-roux knew not how to reward a service done him," said the count, with all the dignity of former days, as taking his cousin's hand, he placed it in that of the wealthy burgher, whose fortunes were now so much higher than his own.

Before morning the last lord of Chateaux-roux was miles away from his ancient castle, on his road to exile, and many years passed ere he trod the land of France again; but long ere that time Clarice had become the happy wife of the young merchant, and all Chateaux-roux had held high festival in honor of the union of the two classes.

HORRIBLE DEPRAVITY.—The Evansville (Ind.) Journal contains an account of the doings of a brute who lives near that place. He went into the woods a few mornings since, taking his dog and gun, and leaving locked up in his house a wife and child, dangerously ill, without food or water. About 10 o'clock at night the neighbors, alarmed by the groans of the woman and the cries of the child, burst open the door and found the woman in a dying condition. She expired in an hour after she was discovered, and just as her brutal husband returned. The child is likely to recover. The wife died of starvation and neglect, and the child was suffering from the same cause. The wretch who was the author of their suffering had no explanation to offer for his conduct.

FOR MURDER.—The Galena Advertiser notes the fact that a lad named George Jackson, aged twelve years, was committed to jail in that city, a day or two since, for the murder of a playmate, called Elias Horn, aged sixteen. Both boys were residents of Millville in that county. The two went to Apple River together; Jackson returned alone. In answer to inquiry for his companion, he said he was drowned. Search was made for the body, and it was found that the deceased had been shot, the ball entering his mouth. Jackson now says he shot him by snapping the gun at him, without knowing it to be loaded. His accusers think he killed him for a dollar and ten cents in his pockets at the time of the tragedy.

THE NUTMEG TREE.—At Bird's Valley and Eldorado Canon, this valuable tree is found in its greatest perfection. Trees are found here from eighteen to twenty-four inches in diameter and full of the fruit, which is contained in a covering like the coating of the English walnut. Before ripe it is soft and quite stringy, but when mature the covering opens and the nutmeg drops. The berries or nut ripens at various periods. Upon the same tree may be found ripe and green fruit. The ripe nutmeg is of the same form, and is as fully aromatic as the fruit from Sumatra. The foliage is like the pine or the hemlock, each leaf having, however, a sharp briar or thorn upon it. The fruit grows in clusters, similar to the cherry, and is indeed quite ornamental. This tree can be easily grown and will be quite an acquisition, and we trust ere long to see it generally cultivated.

THE MORTALITY AT LAMAR'S.—We had the pleasure yesterday of seeing Mr. Chas. Lamar, at whose hotel the dreadful mortality, by cholera, recently occurred. He assures us that the reports that have gone around the country, as to the condition of the cellar under his house, are wholly without foundation—that the cellar has in it a living spring of pure water, and that, on Friday before the disease broke out, it was cleaned and well lined. The fact that, when the sickness did occur, and during the confusion and alarm incident to such a severe blow, a few, say thirty or forty pounds of beef hung in the cellar, until it became tainted, and was speedily thrown out, gave rise to the wonderful exaggerations of which we have been made the victims.

The Daily Gazette.

JANESVILLE : : : WISCONSIN.
TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 8, 1854.

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITON.—We give this morning the opinion of Chief Justice Whiton on the application of Mr. Booth for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from the custody of the U. S. district court, and to-morrow shall follow it with that of Judge Smith on the same application. The importance of the question involved, and the attempt to discredit the court for an alleged inconsistency between the decision in this case and its prior decision declaring the fugitive slave law unconstitutional, will commend these opinions to a general and careful perusal. We think the court will be fully sustained in the later as well as earlier decision.

THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.—The fraud in this bill was designed to benefit the Illinois Central railroad company, by putting the control of the donated lands into the hands of the owners of that road and enabling them to extend it from Dubuque into Minnesota. The alteration in the bill is said to have been discovered by the secretary of the territory, who was on a flying visit to Washington. The particular individuals to be benefitted are also said to be Robert Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Erastus Corning, George L. Schuyler, (Robert's brother,) Edward Bement, (Ketchum's partner,) William P. Barrall, (treasurer of the Illinois Central,) R. B. Mason, (chief engineer,) John M. Forbes of Boston, and John Gardiner, (brother-in-law to John Tyler.)

This company (the Illinois Central) has been one of the most active and powerful interests in opposition to the Valley road and its efforts to obtain a grant of the public lands. The disinterested nature of its hostility and the sincerity of its denunciations of the "frauds" of the latter may be judged by the specimen of its own dealings.

The accusation of the Janesville Gazette that we have gained notoriety or honors under a pretense of aiding in the rescue of Glover, or that we wish to avoid an issue with the federal court, is unwarranted and unjust. Neither by word nor deed have we pretended that we did any more than we actually did, and we have always declared that we did not aid in the rescue of Glover, and that we were not legally liable in an action for his escape. Is it not possible for our brethren of the press to be just to us, but must they bound us, as though they were themselves slave-catchers, and felt jealous of everybody whom the kidnappers were pursuing?

It is talk about forcible resistance to the last decision of the supreme court we can't understand, because there is nothing in it to resist. They simply refused to grant us the writ of habeas corpus, and to talk of resisting such a denial is ridiculous. At least, we can't comprehend it. But we can comprehend that it is the right of the people to resist the execution of the fugitive act, now that it has been declared unconstitutional by our highest state court, for it is not only the doctrine of common sense, but Justice Smith and Justice McLean and all jurists, declare that no one can deny the right of the people to resist an unconstitutional act. It is simply a question of expediency. That's all.

Free Democrat.
We have no disposition to "honor" Mr. Booth, or misrepresent him, but we have thought that himself and some of his friends were disposed to make too much of what seemed to us as a personal disappointment, and too ready to assail a court which had shown itself fearless in the discharge of what its members regarded a legal duty. We still think the columns of the Free Democrat evince this disposition, and we can assure Mr. Booth that we are not alone in this opinion. Many others who by no means can be justly characterized as his enemies, are not at all reluctant to so express themselves. In looking for a motive for his conduct in this matter, it is possible we assigned a wrong one, and we are willing to take his denial of the one imputed to him.

The inapplicability of us of the Democrat's talk about "forcible resistance" would be apparent if it had given its readers a chance to see what we did say. It was Mr. Booth's friends who encouraged "resistance," and we agree with the Free Democrat that it is "ridiculous" to entertain any such idea, so far as the last decision of the supreme court is concerned, and is wholly unnecessary in reference to the fugitive slave law, until the supreme court of the United States overrules the decision of the court of this state. We have no sort of fear that a fugitive will be carried out of this state while that decision stands, and we don't believe a "forcible resistance" of the law will be required to prevent it. As "a question of expediency" we think we had better try now for a repeal of the law, and elect members of congress and United States senators who will vote to wipe it from the statute book, and thereby avoid all occasion for violence and mobs.

VERMONT.—There is at present but one anti-Nebraska ticket in this state, Mr. Walton having withdrawn in favor of Judge Royce, and Mr. Shafter in favor of Mr. Fletcher. We hope no other will be run, and thus let the people of the state pass upon the issue before them without being distracted by a multiplicity of candidates believing and thinking alike. Henry M. Bates, of Washington county, is on the ticket for treasurer with Messrs. Royce and Fletcher.

LINE DOWN.—The telegraph wire is down between Whitewater and Milwaukee, and we are consequently without a report. This accident is the more provoking, as the Atlantic arrived in New York Saturday, with four days later news from Europe, and we were in hopes of getting something further from Washington as to the closing business of the session.

The democratic congressional convention of the northern district is called at Waupun on Tuesday, the 2d of October.

Opinion of Chief Justice Whiton.

The State of Wisconsin—Supreme Court.
In the matter of the application of Sherman M. Booth for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

We think that this application must be denied. The petitioner states in his petition for the writ, that he is imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Milwaukee; and that the cause or pretence of his commitment to the said jail, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is a warrant from Andrew G. Miller, judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; a copy of which warrant is annexed to the petition. The petitioner states further, that the indictment mentioned in the said warrant is founded upon a pretended violation of the fugitive slave act of '50 which he represents as unconstitutional and void. The warrant annexed to the petition commands the marshal of the district to take the petitioner and him safely keep so that he should have his body before the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, forthwith to answer to an indictment pending in said court against him, for aiding and abetting and assisting the escape of Joshua Glover from the custody of Charles C. Cotton, a deputy marshal. The warrant is tested in the name of the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; is sealed with the seal of that court, and signed by its clerk. In the case of Ableman vs. the state of Wisconsin, ex rel. Booth, decided at the present term of the court, we held that the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus by a state magistrate authorized to issue the writ, to bring before him a person who had been committed by a commissioner of the United States, for refusing to enter into a recognizance with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States to answer for an alleged offence, and the discharge of the prisoner so committed, did not interfere with the jurisdiction of that court. But we said distinctly that when a court had obtained jurisdiction of a case, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction would interfere, and that when the jurisdiction of a court was exclusive, no other court could take jurisdiction at all. We supposed this to be a familiar principle, which would be denied by no one.

We are still of this opinion, and if the present application for the writ showed that the petitioner was in confinement for refusing to recognize with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States for this district, in obedience to the order of a commissioner, or other inferior magistrate, we should not hesitate to issue the writ. But the facts set forth in the petition for the writ, show that the petitioner is in confinement by force of a warrant issued by the court, and that the object of imprisonment is to compel him to answer to an indictment now pending against him therein. These facts show that the district court of the United States has obtained jurisdiction of the case, and it is apparent that the indictment pending against the petitioner is for an offence of which the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. We do not see, therefore, how we can consistently with the principles of our former decision, interfere. It is true, that we are not asked to take the case from the district court of the United States, and try the petitioner for the offence with which he is charged but we are asked to remove him from the custody of that court and discharge him, if, in our opinion, his imprisonment is illegal. In other words, we are called upon to do an act which would prevent the court of the United States from proceeding to try and determine a case now pending before it, and of which it has exclusive jurisdiction. For without the custody of its prisoner, that court can not proceed to a trial of him for the alleged offence. But it is said by the petitioner, that the act of congress, for violating which he is indicted, is void, for the reason that it is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that consequently the petition shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. And it is further claimed by him, that the district court of the United States can not obtain jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding when the facts show that no court can have jurisdiction to try a person for an alleged violation of a void statute. Hence the petitioner concludes that by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, and discharging him from custody, we should not disturb the jurisdiction of the district court, for the very obvious reason that it never acquired jurisdiction. But it is to be remembered that that court, having the case pending before it, is of necessity compelled to decide every question which the case involves—that of its own jurisdiction included. It must therefore retain the case in order to decide that, as well as every other question that may arise. No state court can therefore interfere.

The application must be denied.

WHITON, C. Justice.

The Free Press comments upon our article of Thursday in reference to the nomination of Mr. Walton for governor in Vermont. We suppose our neighbor had his article prepared and put in type before he saw our reply of Saturday to the Free Democrat, and could not afford to lose so much matter for his paper. No harm done; so let it "pass."

A TIGHT FIT.—The Providence Journal says: "It was rather a sad sight to see a man of Mr. Benton's position apply the term 'dirty dog' to a senator in congress. It was a sadder sight to see the senator prove on the floor of the senate that even so indecorous and vulgar a phrase was not misplaced."

The United States senate voted last week Monday to grant a pension to the widow of James Bachelder, the deputy marshal killed in Boston in the Burns riot. The vote stood 35 to 14—senator Dodge of this state voting in the affirmative and senator Walker in the negative. The entire negative vote was as follows: Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Holt, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Stuart, Thompson of Ky., Wade, Walker.

PROF. COMSTOCK AGAIN.—In alluding to this "distinguished gentleman" as the "fiscal agent" of several Milwaukee railroads, we supposed his professed connection with them was merely one of his own peculiarly modest announcements, and that the Morning News was happily selected as a very proper "medium" to introduce him to the public in his newly-assumed capacity; but we learn from the Sentinel that he has really ingratiated himself into the confidence of some persons in that city "interested in some of our (Milwaukee) roads," and been entrusted with some sort of a mission for their benefit to the "rich old farmers of Dutchess county." After this, we think our Milwaukee friends may as well stop talking about "moon-shine" or "gas" in connection with railroad matters.

KIER'S ROCK OIL,

FROM a Well 400 feet deep, Near Pittsburgh, Pa., is offered to the public as a Natural Medicine of no common value. It is a different kind from the old Kentucky or American Oil, as this is used EXTERNALLY as well as internally. As a local remedy in Paralysis, Piles, Rheumatism, Deafness, Loss of Sight, Burns, &c. Also, as a valuable Internal Remedy for Biliousness, Stomachic Disorders, Dropsy, old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Female Diseases, Wounds, Bladder and Kidneys, Bronchitis, Pains &c. &c. It invites the investigating Physician, as well as the suffering patient, to become acquainted with its merits.

Discovered in 1849, it has within 2 or 3 years, made multitudes of cures, and multitudes of friends—and as soon as tried the Sales not only increase but hold out. Testimony to its great merit is constantly accumulating in the hands of the proprietor by certificates, letters, and in other ways.

IT DOCTORS THE WHOLE MAN—flesh and blood in skin and bones—from head to foot—how it acts upon the system—upon the nerves of different manifestations, we cannot fully tell. While it is both cathartic and tranquil, it is also a powerful and a powerful regulator. A leading principle in it is Nitrogen. When you once have it in the family you will not be without it.

Full as the world is of Patent Medicines—it is thought not best to suppress this, the work of NATURE—to make room for Humana Inventions. Price 50 cents per bottle. It can be had of all Wholesale and Retail Druggists and Chemists in the West at Proprietor's prices.

HAVE WE AGUE AMONG US?—A tea spoonful every three hours in the absence of the fever will cure you of Ague or Biliousness. Druggists, Physicians, and all friends of the afflicted, will do well to recommend this Oil for PROLAPSUS UTERI, and good will be done. Take the Oil 2 or 3 times a day, and bathe the lower part of the back with it. Have you SCROFULA? The Petroleum will eradicate it, root and branch, at little cost or inconvenience. Get circulars of directions for adults and children, gratis of the agents. A trial is all we ask, and get the right kind—this is of a beautiful reddish color and clear. Try it for Piles.

For sale by HOLDEN KEMP & CO. C. F. Simma, Cary & Gordon, Beloit; G. W. Kinzie, Madison, Goodrich, Dyer & Co., Milton; S. A. Pond, Albany; F. D. Vaughn & Co., Union; H. Cheney, Johnstown; M. Elliot, Monroe.

THE DAILY GAZETTE.

MEETING OF THE COMMON COUNCIL.—At the meeting of the council last Saturday evening the principal business transacted was to declare void the contract with Messrs. Hume & Rague for building the Milwaukee street bridge, and authorizing the bridge committee to let a new one for its construction. It was also decided to levy and collect a tax the present year to pay for it. A petition from various citizens to make the bridge as nearly level as practicable was referred to a select committee.

OAK HILL CEMETERY.—At a meeting of the trustees of this cemetery association last Saturday evening it was resolved to build a dwelling house inside the enclosure for the use of a sexton.

SHEET MUSIC.—Our musical friends will find a very excellent assortment of music, arranged for the piano, harp and other instruments, at Mr. Sutherland's book-store. He is also constantly receiving all the new pieces as soon as published. See his advertisement.

NEW PAPER.—Messrs. Baker & Doty, of the Free Press, propose to publish a semi-monthly "miscellaneous and reformatory journal," to be called "The Wisconsin Home," under the editorial charge of Mr. Doty. Price $1 per year. "We wish the new paper all the success it merits," as our neighbors said of ourselves when we improved the looks of the Gazette.

MR. HUNTER'S LAND BILL.—We are yet without advice from Washington as to the fate of the homestead bill as amended in the senate by Mr. Hunter. In addition to the homestead provisions heretofore given, it makes a donation to the states of alternate sections of land in aid of railroads chartered by the states, and allows states to purchase lands within their limits on the same terms as individuals.

CHOLERA.—We learn that two Norwegian emigrants died with cholera at the depot Sunday night. Three others attacked recovered. The company were bound to Koskonong, and have since left the city.

VOTE ON THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.—The following is the vote in the senate on the passage of the river and harbor bill:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge, (Wis.), Dodge, (Iowa), Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Grier, Gillette, James, Johnson, Jones, (Iowa), Jones, (Tenn.), Pearce, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Shedd, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson, (Ky.), Thompson, (N. J.), Wade, Walker.—81.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Brown, Clay, Dawson, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Toombs, Williams.—17.

Of the yeas, 15 were whigs and free soilers, and of the nays all but one democrats. The ultimate fate of the bill is not yet known, though no one doubts that the president vetoed or pocketed it, if it survived the committee of conference and got through both houses.

INHALATION.

A Cure for Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Heart and Liver.

DR. THOMAS H. GREENHOUGH, late of London, England, resident Physician of New Orleans, for the above specialities, respectfully informs the citizens of Janesville that he will remain a few days at the MERCANTILE HOTEL, to afford those of the afflicted who may desire it, an opportunity of availing themselves of Inhalation, the only reliable process of cure.

The consideration of the connection between mind and body, and the influence of nature's laws upon the constitution of man, constitutes a very essential part of Dr. Greenough's practice, and governs him in the administration of remedies, which are numerous and varied, to suit the peculiar condition of each case.

His plan of living (a hygienic sheet) embraces not only the kind of food and drink, but the kind of bath, exercise, dress, &c., most congenial to the organism of the patient.

After Dr. Greenough's departure, Dr. Hays McKinley, resident Physician of Kenosha, will attend to those who may place themselves under the care of Dr. G., who will shortly return to New Orleans to resume his practice.

Consultation free. Office at the Merchants' Hotel.

From the Belle Assemblée. LAST TRIBUTE OF CHATEAUX-ROUX.

The count received the procession with state-like courtesy, as his predecessors had done for many generations. The widow of Chateaux-roux then offered to kneel before the count in token of submission; but he gracefully prevented her, and, raising his plumed hat, saluted her according to the fashion of the time, by ceremoniously kissing her on each cheek, and without knowing her story, he gazed with interest on her beauty, as she modestly performed her part in pageant by presenting herself in the name of the inhabitants of Chateaux-roux with the usual commendation for their tax.

The count answered the beautiful bride—whose sorrows he guessed not—courteously, and more graciously and kindly than he had been wont to treat her predecessor; a stout, cherry-checked dame, who on such occasions had always appeared to feel herself a person of the utmost importance. Then drawing off his left glove, and holding it by the points of the fingers in the right hand, he raised it, and striking lightly the vase of roses on Lucille's head, already loosened by her attendant maidens, it fell to the ground, and was dashed to a thousand pieces, while the band struck up a triumphant air, and the crowd cheered loudly.

All the members of the procession, and also the count, maintained their places, waiting until silence should be restored, that the lord of Chateaux-roux might, according to custom, declare the tax remitted for the past year. But just as the last strains of the music were dying away, and the count had raised his hand to speak, the hitherto passive bride shrieked wildly. It seemed to her excited mind that the pale, wan shade of one long dead stood before her, and welcoming it as a messenger from the other world, she sprang quickly forward, and crying, "Claude! Claude! take me with you!" threw herself on the stranger's bosom, while the bride veil swept over both, and the wreath of orange blossoms fell on his breast.

But it was a living and loving heart on which Lucille cast herself, though she had long believed it cold and still. For it was another Mornand who had fallen beneath the dagger of a stranger, though owing to the confusion at that time reigning in Paris, it had been erroneously stated to be Claude Mornand of Chateaux-roux; while Claude himself, arrested the very evening of his arrival in Paris, as an accomplice in some conspiracy, of whose very existence he was ignorant, had for three years suffered a living death in one of the crowded prisons of Paris, unable to send a single word or token of his safety to her he loved. At length, after many difficulties and dangers, he had escaped with the Count of Lienne, had conducted him to Chateaux-roux, and was on his way to seek Jean Pauline, and bid him break the tidings of his safety to Lucille, when she rushed forward and threw herself into his arms.

"I congratulate you on your return to life and to your friends," said Jean Pauline, approaching Mornand. "Yes, and to one of the best of wives and mothers, notwithstanding this veil," he added, raising the veil which Mornand had refrained from touching. And he rapidly detailed to him the persecution by which Lucille had become a second time a bride.

"Kindly treatment, in truth, for the widow and the fatherless!" said Mornand bitterly; and when some of his former acquaintances came, not without embarrassment, to welcome him back, he turned from them indignantly.

"And now, Monsieur le Comte," said Pierre Baudouin, soon after the conclusion of the last scene, in which the count had shown a great interest, "will it please you to declare the tax remitted for the year?"

"It is not remitted," coldly answered the lord of Chateaux-roux, the graciousness he had evinced throughout the morning having vanished at the sight of the stately form of Albert Rohan mingling in the crowd. "The conditions, on which alone exemption was granted have not been fulfilled, and the tax remains in force."

"But we cannot fulfill them," said Jules Soyey, eagerly. "We have done all we could do to compass it; and it is not our fault that, after all, Madame Mornand was not a widow."

"No; I doubt not that, for your own interests, you would as willingly have made her a widow as a wife," said the count ironically. "But know that it is not for this deed, nor for others not much better," he haughtily added, glancing towards Albert, "that you need expect favor at the hands of the lord of Chateaux-roux."

"Favor!" echoed from lip to lip, but reached not the count's ears.

"Therefore, on the morrow my steward will proceed to the examination of your property, and the collection of the title of its value," resumed the count, loftily addressing the assembled burglers, who stood in silence of astonishment at the extent to which the count was about to push his claim, "which," and Albert fancied the noble's eye again fell on him, "will form the dowry of my cousin, Mademoiselle de Bosuet, on her approaching marriage with the Count de Trouville."

Albert Rohan felt his blood boil at this last remark; and so did many another at the insulting scrutiny and loss with which his property was threatened.

"Men of Chateaux-roux, will you bear this?" exclaimed Albert Rohan.

"Never! never!" cried twenty voices from the younger portion of the crowd.

"We bore too much when we stood by and saw a woman sacrificed to save the gold for which our fathers toiled!" said one of them. "Better have broken the yoke at once, and freed all from such bondage."

"I don't see why the count should take advantage of our misfortunes," muttered Baudouin, suddenly becoming an advocate for equity.

"Shame on you if you submit to it!" cries a bold spirit in the crowd. "Shall the men of Chateaux-roux alone be slaves, with all other Frenchmen free?"

"We will be free! we will be like the other men of France!" burst in an almost unanimous response from the more youthful burglers.

"Let us seize the castle, and revenge all our wrongs upon the count!" cried one, whom in other days the lord of Chateaux-roux had treated with injustice. "He has been a hard master to many of us, and we have nothing but evil to repay to him."

"Come to terms with the count, agree to pay him a reasonable price for his lands, and have done with this mockery of tribute-paying forever."

"We will not pay him a single franc," replied the people; and loudest among those who demanded freedom for all, were Pierre Baudouin and Jules Soyey.

And regardless of the voices of Albert Rohan and some few others who sought to restrain them, the yelling multitude dashed forward to the gate of the castle, seeking the life of the man who that morning had stood unharmed and honored among them.

Albert and his more considerate companions followed them, seeking opportunity to soothe the storm. But Rohan had another and heavier reason; he was in agony at the thought of the alarm Clarice would endure, and the rude shocks she might encounter in a castle filled with men infuriated against her class and kindred.

He had passed through a considerable part of the castle, trying in vain to prevent the crowd from destroying the pictures and furniture that filled the rooms, when he heard the voices of several men sternly demanding where the count was and promising safety to some one if his hiding-place should be revealed.

"But I know not where he is," replied a sweet voice, whose every tone thrilled on Albert's heart, and he immediately sprang forward to the aid of Clarice de Bosuet.

With little difficulty he freed the terrified girl from her interrogators, and by means of a secret passage, to which Clarice had been hastening when the men arrested her, they made their way out of the castle on the farther side, where all was tranquil as of old. Hurrying along a lonely pathway to the town, whose deserted streets contrasted strangely with the scene of disorder they had quitted, Albert sought at once his mother's house, and confided Clarice to her care. Then, urged by the terrified girl's fears for the fate of her cousin and his gentle countess, he hastened back to the castle, from which the sounds of the tumult rose high on the summer air.

As he crossed the court-yard he met Jean Pauline escorting the countess, who was weeping bitterly, and entreating the life of her husband. But though no one answered her prayer, the majority stood aside with their heads uncovered and the deepest respect in their manner. With all their new-born hatred of her class, they could not forget that she had always been the friend of the poor and suffering.

Within the castle the hand of destruction had been already busy, and deafening shouts of men infuriated by their work of ruin, greeted Albert on every side. No tidings of the count's fate reached him, and he began to hope he had escaped, when, as it grew dark, a loud cry of triumph broke suddenly on his ear. He guessed at once its cause, and, hurrying on, found the lord of Chateaux-roux disarmed, in the hands of a couple of fierce peasants, who had just dragged him from behind the tapestry of an unused chamber. One held an axe uplifted to strike, when Albert, springing forward, caught his arm, and wrenching the weapon from him, pushed him staggering some paces back.

"Who are you that dares to come between my vengeance and the man who has wronged me?" demanded the peasant—the same who had first suggested the attack upon the castle.

"No matter who I am," said Albert, stepping before the count, who had shaken off his other captor. "I stand not by to see murder done; and you shall take my life ere you have mine." It was not until within a room furnished sumptuously almost as his own castle, that the count, freed from immediate danger, seemed to recover from its paralyzing effects.

"Yes, I also owe my life to this brave youth," said he to Clarice, who came to welcome him to safety; "and now, poor and fugitive like my brother nobles, an exile's life is before me. And yet," he added, turning to Albert, "I believe I have that which will still repay all I owe to you." Albert flushed to his very brow, and glanced at Clarice. "Monsieur le Count, you know well what I dare not ask."

"It shall never be said that a lord of Chateaux-roux knew not how to reward a service done him," said the count, with all the dignity of former days, as taking his cousin's hand, he placed it in that of the wealthy burgler, whose fortunes were now so much higher than his own.

Before morning the last lord of Chateaux-roux was miles away from his ancient castle, on his road to exile, and many years passed ere he trod the land of France again; but long ere that time Clarice had become the happy wife of the young merchant, and all Chateaux-roux had held high festival in honor of the union of the two classes.

HORRIBLE DEPRIVATION.—The Evansville (Ind.) Journal contains an account of the doings of a brute who lives near that place. He went into the woods a few mornings since, taking his dog and gun, and leaving locked up in his house a wife and child, dangerously ill, without food or water. About 10 o'clock at night the neighbors alarmed by the groans of the woman and the cries of the child, burst open the door and found the woman in a dying condition. She expired in an hour after she was discovered, and just as her brutal husband returned. The child is likely to recover. The wife died of starvation and neglect, and the child was suffering from the same cause. The wretch who was the author of their suffering had no explanation to offer for his conduct.

FOR MURDER.—The Galena Advertiser notes the fact that a lad named George Jackson, aged twelve years, was committed to jail in that city, a day or two since, for the murder of a playmate, called Elias Horn, aged sixteen. Both boys were residents of Millville in that county. The two went to Apple river together; Jackson returned alone. In answer to inquiry for his companion, he said he was drowned. Search was made for the body, and it was found that the deceased had been shot, the ball entering his mouth. Jackson now says he shot him by snapping the gun at him, without knowing it to be loaded. His accusers think he killed him for a dollar and ten cents in his pockets at the time of the tragedy.

THE NUTMEG TREE.—At Bird's Valley and Eldorado Canon, this valuable tree is found in its greatest perfection. Trees are found here from eighteen to twenty-four inches in diameter and full of the fruit, which is contained in a covering like the coating of the English walnut. Before ripe it is soft and quite stringy, but when mature the covering opens and the nutmeg drops. The berries or nutmegs are at various periods. Upon the same tree may be found ripe and green fruit. The ripe nutmeg is of the same form, and is as fully aromatic as the fruit from Sumatra. The foliage is like the pine or the hemlock, each leaf having, however, a sharp briar or thorn upon it. The fruit grows in clusters, similar to the cherry, and is indeed quite ornamental. This tree can be easily grown and will be quite an acquisition, and we trust are long to see it generally cultivated. —Cal. Farmer.

THE MORTALITY AT LAMAR'S.—We had the pleasure yesterday of seeing Mr. Chas. Lamar, at whose hotel the dreadful mortality, by cholera, recently occupied. He assures us that the reports that have gone around the country, as to the condition of the cellar under his house, are wholly without foundation—that the cellar has in it a living spring of pure water, and that, on Friday before the disease broke out, it was cleansed and well lined. The fact that, when the sickness did occur, and during the confusion and alarm incident to such a severe blow, a few, say thirty or forty pounds of beef hung in the cellar, until it became tainted, and was speedily thrown out, gave rise to the wonderful exaggerations of which we have been made the victims. —Galena Jeff.

The Daily Gazette.

JANESVILLE : : : WISCONSIN.
TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 8, 1884.

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITON.—We give this morning the opinion of Chief Justice Whiton on the application of Mr. Booth for a writ of habeas corpus. The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of the U. S. district court, and to-morrow shall follow it with that of Judge Smith on the same application. The importance of the question involved, and the attempt to discredit the court for an alleged inconsistency between the decision in this case and its prior decision declaring the fugitive slave law unconstitutional, will commend these opinions to a general and careful perusal. We think the court will be fully sustained in the later as well as earlier decision.

THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.—The fraud in this bill was designed to benefit the Illinois Central railroad company, by putting the control of the donated lands into the hands of the owners of that road and enabling them to extend it from Dubuque into Minnesota. The alteration in the bill is said to have been discovered by the secretary of the territory, who was on a flying visit to Washington. The particular individuals to be benefited are also said to be Robert Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Erasmus Corning, George L. Schuyler, (Robert's brother,) Edward Bement, (Ketchum's partner,) William P. Burrall, (treasurer of the Illinois Central,) R. B. Mason, (chief engineer,) John M. Forbes of Boston, and John Gardiner, (brother-in-law to John Tyler.)

This company (the Illinois Central) has been one of the most active and powerful interests in opposition to the Valley road and its efforts to obtain a grant of the public lands. The disinterested nature of its hostility and the sincerity of its denunciations of the "frauds" of the latter may be judged by this specimen of its own dealings.

The accusation of the Janesville Gazette that we have gained notoriety or honors under a pretense of aiding in the rescue of Glover, or that we wish to avoid an issue with the federal court, is unwarranted and unjust. Neither by word nor deed have we pretended that we did any more than we actually did, and we have always declared that we did not aid in the rescue of Glover, and that we were not legally liable in an action for his escape. Is it not possible for our brethren of the press to be just to us, but must they bound us, as though they were themselves slave-catchers, and feel jealous of every body whom the kidnappers were pursuing?

It is talk about forcible resistance to the last decision of the supreme court we can't understand, because there is nothing in it to resist. They simply refused to grant us the writ of habeas corpus, and to talk of resisting such a denial is ridiculous. At least, we can't comprehend it. But we can comprehend that it is the right of the people to resist the execution of the fugitive act, now that it has been declared unconstitutional by our highest state court, for it is not only the doctrine of common sense, but Justice Smith and Justice McLean and all just men, declare that no one can deny the right of the people to resist an unconstitutional act. It is simply a question of expediency. That's all. —Free Democrat.

We have no disposition to "hound" Mr. Booth, or misrepresent him, but we have thought that himself and some of his friends were disposed to make too much of what seemed to us a personal disappointment, and too ready to assail a court which had shown itself fearless in the discharge of what its members regarded a legal duty. We still think the columns of the Free Democrat evince this disposition, and we can assure Mr. Booth that we are not alone in this opinion. Many others who by no means can be justly characterized as his enemies, are not at all reluctant to so express themselves. In looking for a motive for his conduct in this matter, it is possible we assigned a wrong one, and we are willing to take his denial of the one imputed to him.

The inapplicability to us of the Democrat's talk about "forcible resistance" would be apparent if it had given its readers a chance to see what we did say. It was Mr. Booth's friends who encouraged "resistance," and we agree with the Free Democrat that it is "ridiculous" to entertain any such idea, so far as the last decision of the supreme court is concerned, and is wholly unnecessary in reference to the fugitive slave law, until the supreme court of the United States overrules the decision of the court of this state. We have no sort of fear that a fugitive will be carried out of this state while that decision stands, and we don't believe a "forcible resistance" of the law will be required to prevent it. As "a question of expediency" we think we had better try now for a repeal of the law, and elect members of congress and United States senators who will vote to wipe it from the statute book, and thereby avoid all occasion for violence and mobs.

VERMONT.—There is at present but one anti-Nebraska ticket in this state, Mr. Walton having withdrawn in favor of Judge Royce, and Mr. Shafter in favor of Mr. Fletcher. We hope no other will be run, and, thus let the people of the state pass upon the issue before them without being distracted by a multiplicity of candidates believing and thinking alike. Henry M. Bates, of Washington county, is on the ticket for treasurer with Messrs. Royce and Fletcher.

LINE DOWN.—The telegraph wire is down between Whitewater and Milwaukee, and we are consequently without a report. This accident is the more provoking, as the Atlantic arrived in New York Saturday, with four days later news from Europe, and we were in hopes of getting something further from Washington as to the closing business of the session.

The democratic congressional convention of the northern district is called at Waupun on Tuesday, the 3d of October.

Opinion of Chief Justice Whiton.

The State of Wisconsin—Supreme Court.
In the matter of the application of Sherman M. Booth for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

We think that this application must be denied. The petitioner states in his petition for the writ, that he is imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Milwaukee; and that the cause or pretence of his commitment to the said jail, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is a warrant from Andrew G. Miller, judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; a copy of which warrant is annexed to the petition. The petitioner states further, that the indictment mentioned in the said warrant is founded upon a pretended violation of the fugitive slave act of '50 which he represents as unconstitutional and void. The warrant annexed to the petition commands the marshal of the district to take the petitioner and him safely keep so that he should have his body before the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, forthwith to answer to an indictment pending in said court against him, for aiding and abetting and assisting the escape of Joshua Glover from the custody of Charles C. Cotton, a deputy marshal. The warrant is tested in the name of the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; is sealed with the seal of that court, and signed by its clerk. In the case of Abienau vs. the state of Wisconsin, et al., Booth, decided at the present term of the court, we hold that the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus by a state magistrate authorized to issue the writ, to bring before him a person who had been committed by a commissioner of the United States, for refusing to enter into a recognizance with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States to answer for an alleged offence, and the discharge of the prisoner so committed, did not interfere with the jurisdiction of that court. But we said distinctly that when a court had obtained jurisdiction of a case, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction would interfere, and that when the jurisdiction of a court was exclusive, no other court could take jurisdiction at all. We supposed that to be a familiar principle, which would be denied by no one.

We are still of this opinion, and if the present application for the writ showed that the petitioner was in confinement for refusing to recognize with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States for this district, in obedience to the order of a commissioner, or other inferior magistrate, we should not hesitate to issue the writ. But the facts set forth in the petition for the writ, show that the petitioner is in confinement by force of a warrant issued by the court, and that the object of imprisonment is to compel him to answer to an indictment now pending against him therein.

These facts show that the district court of the United States has obtained jurisdiction of the case, and it is apparent that the indictment pending against the petitioner is for an offence of which the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. We do not see, therefore, how we can, consistently with the principles of our former decision, interfere. It is true, that we are not asked to take the case from the district court of the United States, and try the petitioner for the offence with which he is charged, but we are asked to remove him from the custody of that court and discharge him, if, in our opinion, his imprisonment is illegal. In other words, we are called upon to do an act which would prevent the court of the United States from proceeding to try and determine a case now pending before it, and of which it has exclusive jurisdiction. For without the custody of its prisoner, that court can not proceed to a trial of him for the alleged offence. But it is said by the petitioner, that the act of congress, for violating which he is indicted, is void, for the reason that it is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that consequently the petition shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. And it is further claimed by him, that the district court of the United States can not obtain jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding when the facts show that no court can have jurisdiction to try a person for an alleged violation of a void statute. Hence the petitioner concludes that by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, and discharging him from custody, we should not disturb the jurisdiction of the district court, for the very obvious reason that it never acquired jurisdiction. But it is to be remembered that that court, having the case pending before it, is of necessity compelled to decide every question which the case involves—that of its own jurisdiction included. It must therefore retain the case in order to decide that, as well as every other question that may arise. No state court can therefore interfere.

The application must be denied.
WHITON, C. Justice.

The Free Press comments upon our article of Thursday in reference to the nomination of Mr. Walton for governor in Vermont. We suppose our neighbor had his article prepared and put in type before he saw our reply of Saturday to the Free Democrat, and could not afford to lose so much matter for his paper. No harm done; so let it "pass."

A TIGHT FIT.—The Providence Journal says: "It was rather a sad sight to see a man of Mr. Benton's position apply the term 'dirty dog' to a senator in congress. It was a sadder sight to see the senator prove on the floor of the senate that even so judicious and vulgar a phrase was not misplaced."

The United States senate voted last week Monday to grant a pension to the widow of James Bachelder, the deputy marshal killed in Boston in the Burns' riot. The vote stood 85 to 14—senator Dodge of this state voting in the affirmative and senator Walker in the negative. The entire negative vote was as follows:

Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fassenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Stuart, Thompson of Ky., Wade, Walker.

PROF. COMSTOCK AGAIN.—In alluding to this "distinguished gentleman" as the "fiscal agent" of several Milwaukee railroads, we supposed his professed connection with them was merely one of his own peculiarly modest announcements, and that the Morning News was happily selected as a very proper "medium" to introduce him to the public in his newly-assumed capacity; but we learn from the Sentinel that he has really ingratiated himself into the confidence of some persons in that city "interested in some of our (Milwaukee) roads," and been entrusted with some sort of a mission for their benefit to the "rich old farmers of Dutchess county." After this, we think our Milwaukee friends may as well stop talking about "moon-shine" or "gas" in connection with railroad matters.

[Concluded from yesterday.]

The count received the procession with stately courtesy, as his predecessors had done for many generations. The widow of Chateauxroux then offered to kneel before the count in token of submission; but he gracefully prevented her, and, raising his plumed hat, saluted her according to the fashion of the time, by ceremoniously kissing her on each cheek, and without knowing her story, he gazed with interest on her beauty, as she modestly performed her part in pageant by presenting herself in the name of the inhabitants of Chateauxroux with the usual commendation for their tax.

The count answered the beautiful bride—whose sorrows he guessed not—courteously, and more graciously and kindly than he had been wont to treat her predecessor; a stout, cherry-cheeked dame, who on such occasions had always appeared to feel herself a person of the utmost importance. Then drawing off his left glove, and holding it by the points of the fingers in the right hand, he raised it, and striking lightly the vase of roses on Lucille's head, already loosened by her attendant maidens, it fell to the ground, and was dashed to a thousand pieces, while the band struck up a triumphant air, and the crowd cheered loudly.

All the members of the procession, and also the count, maintained their places, waiting until silence should be restored, that the lord of Chateauxroux might, according to custom, declare the tax remitted for the past year. But just as the last strains of the music were dying away, and the count had raised his hand to speak, the hitherto passive bride shrieked wildly. It seemed to her excited mind that the pale, wan shade of one long dead stood before her; and welcoming it as a message from the other world sent to free her from the heavy burthen of life, she sprang quickly forward; and crying, "Claude! Claude! take me with you!" threw herself on the stranger's bosom, while the bridal veil swept over both, and the wreath of orange blossoms fell on his breast.

But it was a living and loving being on which Lucille cast herself, though she had so long believed it cold and still. For it was another Mornand who had fallen beneath the dagger of a stranger, though owing to the confusion at that time reigning in Paris, it had been erroneously stated to be Claude Mornand of Chateauxroux; while Claude himself, arrested the very evening of his arrival in Paris, as an accomplice in some conspiracy, of whose very existence he was ignorant, had for three years suffered a living death in one of the crowded prisons of Paris, unable to send a single word or token of his safety to her he loved. At length, after many difficulties and dangers, he had escaped with the Count of Lienne, had conducted him to Chateauxroux, and was on his way to seek Jean Pauline, and bid him break the tidings of his safety to Lucille, when she rushed forward and threw herself into his arms.

"I congratulate you on your return to life and to your friends," said Jean Pauline, approaching Mornand. "Yes, and to one of the best of wives and mothers, notwithstanding this veil," he added, raising the veil which Mornand had refrained from touching. And he rapidly detailed to him the persecution by which Lucille had become a second time a bride.

"Kindly treatment, in truth, for the widow and the fatherless!" said Mornand bitterly; and when some of his former acquaintances came, not without embarrassment, to welcome him back, he turned from them indignantly.

"And now, Monsieur le Comte," said Pierre Baudouin, soon after the conclusion of the last scene, in which the count had shown a great interest, "will it please you to declare the tax remitted for the year?"

"It is not remitted," coldly answered the lord of Chateauxroux, the graciousness he had evinced throughout the morning having vanished at the sight of the stately form of Albert Rohan mingling in the crowd. "The conditions on which alone exemption was granted have not been fulfilled, and the tax remains in force."

"But we cannot fulfill them," said Jules Soyer, eagerly. "We have done all we could do to compass it; and it is not our fault that, after all, Madame Mornand was not a widow."

"No; I doubt not that, for your own interests, you would as willingly have made her a widow as a wife," said the count ironically. "But know that it is not for this deed, nor for others not much better," he laughingly added, glancing towards Albert, "that you need expect favor at the hands of the lord of Chateauxroux."

"Favor!" echoed from lip to lip, but reached not the count's ears.

"Therefore, on the morrow my steward will proceed to the examination of your property, and the collection of the title of its value," resumed the count, loftily addressing the assembled burghers, who stood in silence of astonishment at the extent to which the count was about to push his claim, "which," and Albert fancied the noble's eye again fell on him, "will form the dowry of my cousin, Mademoiselle de Bosuet, on her approaching marriage with the Count de Trouville."

Albert Rohan felt his blood boil at this last remark; and so did many another at the insulting scrutiny and loss with which his property was threatened.

"Men of Chateauxroux, will you bear this?" exclaimed Albert Rohan.

"Never! never!" cried twenty voices from the younger portion of the crowd.

"We bore too much when we stood by and saw a woman sacrificed to save the gold for which our fathers toiled!" said one of them. "Better have broken the yoke at once, and freed all from such bondage."

"I don't see why the count should take advantage of our misfortunes," muttered Baudouin, suddenly becoming an advocate for equity.

"Shame on you if you submit to it!" cried a bold spirit in the crowd. "Shall the men of Chateauxroux alone be slaves, with all other Frenchmen free?"

"We will be free! we will be like the other men of France!" burst in an almost unanimous response from the more youthful burghers.

"Let us seize the castle, and revenge all our wrongs upon the count!" cried one, whom in other days the lord of Chateauxroux had treated with injustice. "He has been a hard master to many of us, and we have nothing but evil to repay to him."

"Stop, stop!" cried Albert Rohan, "the liberty which is stained with blood will never last."

"What would you have us do?" said one among them.

"Come to terms with the count, agree to pay him a reasonable price for his lands, and have done with this mockery of tribute-paying forever."

"We will not pay him a single franc," replied the people; and loudest among those who demanded freedom for all, were Pierre Baudouin and Jules Soyer.

And regardless of the voices of Albert Rohan and some few others who sought to restrain them, the yelling multitude dashed forward to the gate of the castle, seeking the life of the man who that morning stood unharmed and honored among them.

Albert and his more considerate companions followed them, seeking opportunity to soothe the storm. But Rohan had another and far weightier reason; he was in agony at the thought of the alarm Charlie would endure, and the rude shocks she might encounter in a castle filled with men infuriated against her class and kindred.

He had passed through a considerable part of the castle, trying in vain to prevent the crowd destroying the pictures and furniture that filled the rooms, when he heard the voices of several men sternly demanding where the count was, and promising safety to some one if his hiding-place should be revealed.

"But I know not where he is," replied a sweet voice, whose every tone thrilled on Albert's heart, and he immediately sprang forward to the aid of Charlie de Bosuet.

With little difficulty he freed the terrified girl from her interrogators, and by means of a secret passage, to which Charlie had been listening when the men arrested her, they made their way out of the castle on the farther side, where all was tranquil as of old. Hurrying along a lonely pathway to the town, whose deserted streets contrasted strangely with the scene of disorder they had quitted, Albert sought at once his mother's house, and confided Charlie to her care. Then, urged by the terrified girl's fears for the fate of her cousin and his gentle countess, he hastened back to the castle, from which the sounds of the tumult rose high on the summer air.

As he crossed the courtyard he met Jean Pauline escorting the countess, who was weeping bitterly, and entreating the life of her husband. But though no one answered her prayer, the majority stood aside with their heads uncovered and the deepest respect in their manner. With all their new-born hatred of her class, they could not forget that she had always been the friend of the poor and suffering.

Within the castle the hand of destruction had been already busy, and deafening shouts of men infuriated by their work of ruin, greeted Albert on every side. No tidings of the count's fate reached him, and he began to hope he had escaped, when, as it grew dark, a loud cry of triumph broke suddenly on his ear. He guessed at once its cause, and, hurrying on, found the lord of Chateauxroux disarmed, in the hands of a couple of fierce peasants, who had just dragged him from behind the tapestry of an unused chamber. One held an axe up to strike, when Albert, springing forward, caught his arm, and wrenching the weapon from him, pushed him staggering some paces back.

"Who are you that dares to come between my vengeance and the man who has wronged me?" demanded the peasant—the same who had first suggested the attack upon the castle.

"No matter who I am," said Albert, stepping before the count, who had shaken off his other captor. "I stand not by to see murder done; and you shall take my life ere you have his." It was not until within a room furnished sumptuously almost as his own castle, that the count, freed from immediate danger, seemed to recover from his paralyzing effects.

"Yes, I also owe my life to this brave youth," said he to Charlie, who came to welcome him to safety; "and now, poor and fugitive like my brother nobles, an exile's life is before me. And yet," he added, turning to Albert, "I believe I have that which will still repay all I owe to you."

Albert flushed to his very brow, and glanced at Charlie. "Monsieur le Comte, you know well what I dare not ask."

"It shall never be said that a lord of Chateauxroux knew not how to reward a service done him," said the count, with all the dignity of former days, as taking his cousin's hand, he placed it in that of the wealthy burgher, whose fortunes were now so much higher than his own.

Before morning the last lord of Chateauxroux was miles away from his ancient castle, on his road to exile, and many years passed ere he trod the land of France again; but long ere that time Charlie had become the happy wife of the young merchant, and all Chateauxroux had held high festival in honor of the union of the two classes.

HORRIBLE DEPRIVITY.—The Evansville (Ind.) Journal contains an account of the doings of a brute who lives near that place. He went into the woods a few mornings since, taking his dog and gun, and leaving locked up in his house a wife and child, dangerously ill, without food or water. About 10 o'clock at night the neighbors, alarmed by the groans of the woman and the cries of the child, burst open the door and found the woman in a dying condition. She expired in an hour after she was discovered, and just as her brutal husband returned. The child is likely to recover. The wife died of starvation and neglect, and the child was suffering from the same cause. The wretch who was the author of their suffering had no explanation to offer for his conduct.

FOR MURDER.—The Galena Advertiser notes the fact that a lad named George Jackson, aged twelve years, was committed to jail in that city, a day or two since, for the murder of a playmate, called Elias Horn, aged sixteen. Both boys were residents of Millville in that county. The two went to Apple river together; Jackson returned alone. In answer to inquiry for his companion, he said he was drowned. Search was made for the body, and it was found that the deceased had been shot, the ball entering his mouth. Jackson now says he shot him by snapping the gun at him, without knowing it to be loaded. His accusers think he killed him for a dollar and ten cents in his pockets at the time of the tragedy.

THE NUTMEG TREE.—At Bird's Valley and Eldorado Canon, this valuable tree is found in its greatest perfection. Trees are found here from eighteen to twenty-four inches in diameter and full of the fruit, which is contained in a covering like the coating of the English walnut. Before ripe it is soft and quite stringy, but when mature the covering opens and the nutmeg drops. The berries or nut ripens at various periods. Upon the same tree may be found ripe and green fruit. The ripe nutmeg is of the same form, and is as fully aromatic as the fruit from Sumatra. The foliage is like the pine or the hemlock, each leaf having, however, a sharp briar or thorn upon it. The fruit grows in clusters, similar to the cherry, and is indeed quite ornamental. This tree can be easily grown and will be quite an acquisition, and we trust ere long to see it generally cultivated.—Cal. Farmer.

THE MORTALITY AT LAMAR'S.—We had the pleasure yesterday of seeing Mr. Chas. Lamar, at whose hotel the dreadful mortality, by cholera, recently occurred. He assures us that the reports that have gone around the country, as to the condition of the cellar under his house, are wholly without foundation—that the cellar has in it a living spring of pure water, and that, on Friday before the disease broke out, it was cleaned and well lined. The fact that, when the sickness did occur, and during the confusion and alarm incident to such a severe blow, a few, say thirty or forty pounds of beef hung in the cellar, until it became tainted, and was speedily thrown out, gave rise to the wonderful exaggerations of which we have been made the victims.—Galena Jap.

The Daily Gazette.
JANESVILLE : : : WISCONSIN.
TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 8, 1854.

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITON.—We give this morning the opinion of Chief Justice Whiton on the application of Mr. Booth for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from the custody of the U. S. district court, and to-morrow shall follow it with that of Judge Smith on the same application. The importance of the question involved, and the attempt to discredit the court for an alleged inconsistency between the decision in this case and its prior decision declaring the fugitive slave law unconstitutional, will commend these opinions to a general and careful perusal. We think the court will be fully sustained in the later as well as earlier decision.

THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.—The fraud in this bill was designed to benefit the Illinois Central railroad company, by putting the control of the donated lands into the hands of the owners of that road and enabling them to extend it from Dubuque into Minnesota. The alteration in the bill is said to have been discovered by the secretary of the territory, who was on a flying visit to Washington. The particular individuals to be benefitted are also said to be Robert Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Erasmus Corning, George L. Schuyler, (Robert's brother,) Edward Dement, (Ketchum's partner,) William P. Burall, (treasurer of the Illinois Central,) R. B. Mason, (chief engineer,) John M. Forbes of Boston, and John Gardiner, (brother-in-law to John Tyler.)

This company (the Illinois Central) has been one of the most active and powerful interests in opposition to the Valley road and its efforts to obtain a grant of the public lands. The disinterested nature of its hostility and the sincerity of its denunciations of the "frauds" of the latter may be judged by this specimen of its own dealings.

The accusation of the Janesville Gazette that we have gained notoriety or honors under a pretense of aiding in the rescue of Glover, or that we wish to avoid an issue with the federal court, is unwarranted and unjust. Neither by word nor deed have we pretended that we did any more than we actually did, and we have always declared that we did not aid in the rescue of Glover, and that we were not legally liable in an action for his escape. It is not possible for our brethren of the press to be just to us, but must they wound us, as though they were themselves slave-catchers, and felt jealous of everybody whom the kidnappers were pursuing?

It is talk about forcible resistance to the last decision of the supreme court we can't understand, because there is nothing in it to resist. They simply refused to grant us the writ of habeas corpus, and to talk of resisting such a denial is ridiculous. At least, we can't comprehend it. But we can comprehend that it is the right of the people to resist the execution of the fugitive act, now that it has been declared unconstitutional by our highest state court, for it is not only the doctrine of common sense, but Justice Smith and Justice McLean and six jurists, declare that no one can deny the right of the people to resist an unconstitutional act. It is simply a question of expediency. That's all.—Free Democrat.

We have no disposition to "horn" Mr. Booth, or misrepresent him, but we have thought that himself and some of his friends were disposed to make too much of what seemed to us as a personal disappointment, and too ready to assail a court which had shown itself fearless in the discharge of what its members regarded a legal duty. We still think the columns of the Free Democrat evince this disposition, and we can assure Mr. Booth that we are not alone in this opinion. Many others who by no means can be justly characterized as his enemies, are not at all reluctant to so express themselves. In looking for a motive for his conduct in this matter, it is possible we assigned a wrong one, and we are willing to take his denial of the one imputed to him.

The inapplicability to us of the Democrat's talk about "forcible resistance" would be apparent if it had given its readers a chance to see what we did say. It was Mr. Booth's friends who encouraged "resistance," and we agree with the Free Democrat that it is "ridiculous" to entertain any such idea, so far as the last decision of the supreme court is concerned, and is wholly unnecessary in reference to the fugitive slave law, until the supreme court of the United States overrules the decision of the court of this state. We have no sort of fear that a fugitive will be carried out of this state while that decision stands, and we don't believe a "forcible resistance" of the law will be required to prevent it. As "a question of expediency" we think we had better try now for a repeal of the law, and elect members of congress and United States senators who will vote to wipe it from the statute book, and thereby avoid all occasion for violence and mobs.

VERMONT.—There is at present but one anti-Nebraska ticket in this state, Mr. Walton having withdrawn in favor of Judge Royce, and Mr. Shafter in favor of Mr. Fletcher. We hope no other will be run, and thus let the people of the state pass upon the issue before them without being distracted by a multiplicity of candidates believing and thinking alike. Henry M. Bates, of Washington county, is on the ticket for treasurer with Messrs. Royce and Fletcher.

LISE DOWN.—The telegraph wire is down between Whitewater and Milwaukee, and we are consequently without a report. This accident is the more provoking, as the Atlantic arrived in New York Saturday, with four days later news from Europe, and we were in hopes of getting something further from Washington as to the closing business of the session.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION of the northern district is called at Waupun on Tuesday, the 3d of October.

Opinion of Chief Justice Whiton.
The State of Wisconsin—Supreme Court.
In the matter of the application of Sherman M. Booth for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

We think that this application must be denied. The petitioner states in his petition for the writ, that he is imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Milwaukee; and that the cause or pretence of his commitment to the said jail, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is a warrant from Andrew G. Miller, judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; a copy of which warrant is annexed to the petition. The petitioner states further, that the indictment mentioned in the said warrant is founded upon a pretended violation of the fugitive slave act of '50 which he represents as unconstitutional and void. The warrant annexed to the petition commands the marshal of the district to take the petitioner and him safely keep so that he should have his body before the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, forthwith to answer to an indictment pending in said court against him, for aiding and abetting and assisting the escape of Joshua Glover from the custody of Charles C. Cotton, a deputy marshal. The warrant is tested in the name of the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; is sealed with the seal of that court, and signed by its clerk. In the case of Ableman vs. the state of Wisconsin, ex rel. Booth, decided at the present term of the court, we held that the issue of a writ of habeas corpus by a state magistrate authorized to issue the writ, to bring before him a person who had been committed by a commissioner of the United States, for refusing to enter into a recognizance with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States to answer for an alleged offence, and the discharge of the prisoner so committed, did not interfere with the jurisdiction of that court. But we said distinctly that when a court had obtained jurisdiction of a case, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction would interfere, and that when the jurisdiction of a court was exclusive, no other court could take jurisdiction at all. We supposed this to be a familiar principle, which would be denied by no one.

We are still of this opinion, and if the present application for the writ showed that the petitioner was in confinement for refusing to recognize with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States for this district, in obedience to the order of a commissioner, or other inferior magistrate, we should not hesitate to issue the writ. But the facts set forth in the petition for the writ, show that the petitioner is in confinement by force of a warrant issued by the court, and that the object of imprisonment is to compel him to answer to an indictment now pending against him therein. These facts show that the district court of the United States has obtained jurisdiction of the case, and it is apparent that the indictment pending against the petitioner is for an offence of which the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. We do not see, therefore, how we can consistently with the principles of our former decision, interfere. It is true, that we are not asked to take the case from the district court of the United States, and try the petitioner for the offence with which he is charged but we are asked to remove him from the custody of that court and discharge him, if, in our opinion, his imprisonment is illegal. In other words, we are called upon to do an act which would prevent the court of the United States from proceeding to try and determine a case now pending before it, and of which it has exclusive jurisdiction. For without the custody of its prisoner, that court can not proceed to a trial of him for the alleged offence. But it is said by the petitioner, that the act of congress, for violating which he is indicted, is void, for the reason that it is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that consequently the petition shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. And it is further claimed by him, that the district court of the United States can not obtain jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding when the facts show that no court can have jurisdiction to try a person for an alleged violation of a void statute.—Hence the petitioner concludes that by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, and discharging him from custody, we should not disturb the jurisdiction of the district court, for the very obvious reason that it never acquired jurisdiction. But it is to be remembered that that court, having the case pending before it, is of necessity compelled to decide every question which the case involves—that of its own jurisdiction included. It must therefore retain the case in order to decide that, as well as every other question that may arise. No state court can therefore interfere.

The application must be denied.
WHITON, C. Justice.

THE Free Press comments upon our article of Thursday in reference to the nomination of Mr. Walton for governor in Vermont. We suppose our neighbor had his article prepared and put in type before he saw our reply of Saturday to the Free Democrat, and could not afford to lose so much matter for his paper. No harm done; so let it "pass."

A TROUBLED FETTER.—The Providence Journal says: "It was rather a sad sight to see a man of Mr. Benton's position apply the term 'dirty dog' to a senator in congress. It was a sadder sight to see the senator prove on the floor of the senate that even so indecorous and vulgar a phrase was not misplaced."

THE United States senate voted last week Monday to grant a pension to the widow of James Bachelder, the deputy marshal killed in Boston in the Burns' riot. The vote stood 35 to 14—senator Dodge of this state voting in the affirmative and senator Walker in the negative. The entire negative vote was as follows: Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Stuart, Thompson of Ky., Wade, Walker.

PROF. COMSTOCK AGAIN.—In alluding to this "distinguished gentleman" as the "fiscal agent" of several Milwaukee railroads, we supposed his professed connection with them was merely one of his own peculiarly modest announcements, and that the Morning News was happily selected as a very proper "medium" to introduce him to the public in his newly-assumed capacity; but we learn from the Sentinel that he has really gratified himself into the confidence of some persons in that city "interested in some of our (Milwaukee) roads," and been entrusted with some sort of a mission for their benefit to the "rich old farmers of Dutchess county." After this, we think our Milwaukee friends may as well stop talking about "moon-shine" or "gas" in connection with railroad matters.

(Concluded from yesterday.)

The count received the procession with stately courtesy, as his predecessors had done for many generations. The widow of Chateaux-roux then offered to kneel before the count in token of submission; and he gracefully prevented her, and, raising his plumed hat, saluted her according to the fashion of the time, by ceremoniously kissing her on each cheek, and without knowing her story, he gazed with interest on her beauty, as she modestly performed her part in pageant by presenting herself in the name of the inhabitants of Chateaux-roux with the usual commendation for their tax.

The count answered the beautiful bride—whose sorrows he guessed not—courteously, and more graciously and kindly than he had been wont to treat her predecessor; a stout, cherry-cheeked dame, who on such occasions had always appeared to feel herself a person of the utmost importance. Then drawing off his left glove, and holding it by the points of the fingers in the right hand, he raised it, and striking lightly the vase of roses on Lucille's head, already loosened by her attendant maidens, it fell to the ground, and was dashed to a thousand pieces, while the band struck up a triumphant air, and the crowd cheered loudly.

All the members of the procession, and also the count, maintained their places, waiting until silence should be restored, that the lord of Chateaux-roux might, according to custom, declare the tax remitted for the past year. But just as the last strains of the music were dying away, and the count had raised his hand to speak, the hitherto passive bride shrieked wildly. It seemed to her excited mind that the pale, wan shade of one long dead stood before her; and welcoming it as a message from the other world sent to free her from the heavy burthen of life, she sprang quickly forward; and crying, "Claude! Claude! take me with you!" threw herself on the stranger's bosom, while the bridal veil swept over both, and the wreath of orange blossoms fell on his breast.

But it was a living and loving heart on which Lucille cast herself, though she had so long believed it cold and still. For it was another Mornand who had fallen beneath the dagger of a stranger, though owing to the confusion at that time reigning in Paris, it had been erroneously stated to be Claude Mornand of Chateaux-roux; while Claude himself, arrested the very evening of his arrival in Paris, as an accomplice in some conspiracy, of whose very existence he was ignorant, had for three years suffered a living death in one of the crowded prisons of Paris, unable to send a single word or token of his safety to her he loved. At length, after many difficulties and dangers, he had escaped with the Count of Lienne, had conducted him to Chateaux-roux, and was on his way to seek Jean Pauline, and bid him break the tidings of his safety to Lucille, when she rushed forward and threw herself into his arms.

"I congratulate you on your return to life and to your friends," said Jean Pauline, approaching Mornand. "Yes, and to one of the best of wives and mothers, notwithstanding this veil," he added, raising the veil which Mornand had refrained from touching. And he rapidly detailed to him the persecution by which Lucille had become a second time a bride.

"Kindly treatment, in truth, for the widow and the fatherless!" said Mornand bitterly; and when some of his former acquaintances came, not without embarrassment, to welcome him back, he turned from them indignantly.

"And now, Monsieur le Comte," said Pierre Baudouin, soon after the conclusion of the last scene, in which the count had shown a great interest, "will it please you to declare the tax remitted for the year?"

"It is not remitted," coldly answered the lord of Chateaux-roux, the graciousness he had evinced throughout the morning having vanished at the sight of the stately form of Albert Rohan mingling in the crowd. "The conditions on which alone exemption was granted have not been fulfilled, and the tax remains in force."

"But we cannot fulfill them," said Jules Soyer, eagerly. "We have done all we could do to compass it; and it is not our fault that, after all, Madame Mornand was not a widow."

"No; I doubt not that, for your own interests, you would as willingly have made her a widow as a wife," said the count ironically. "But know that it is not for this deed, nor for others not much better," he laughingly added, glancing towards Albert, "that you need expect favor at the hands of the lord of Chateaux-roux."

"Favor!" echoed from lip to lip, but reached not the count's ears.

"Therefore, on the morrow my steward will proceed to the examination of your property, and the collection of the title of its value," resumed the count, loftily addressing the assembled burghers, who stood in silence of astonishment at the extent to which the count was about to push his claim. "Which," and Albert fancied the noble's eye again fell on him, "will form the dowry of my cousin, Mademoiselle de Bosuet, on her approaching marriage with the Count de Trouville."

Albert Rohan felt his blood boil at this last remark; and so did many another at the insulting scrutiny and loss with which his property was threatened.

"Men of Chateaux-roux, will you bear this?" exclaimed Albert Rohan.

"Never! never!" cried twenty voices from the younger portion of the crowd.

"We bore too much when we stood by and saw a woman sacrificed to save the gold for which our fathers toiled!" said one of them. "Better have broken the yoke at once, and freed all from such bondage."

"I don't see why the count should take advantage of our misfortunes," muttered Baudouin, suddenly becoming an advocate for equity.

"Shame on you if you submit to it!" cried a bold spirit in the crowd. "Shall the men of Chateaux-roux alone be slaves, with all other Frenchmen free?"

"We will be free! we will be like the other men of France!" burst in an almost unanimous response from the more youthful burghers. "Let us seize the castle, and revenge all our wrongs upon the count!" cried one, whom in other days the lord of Chateaux-roux had treated with injustice. "He has been a hard master to many of us, and we have nothing but evil to repay to him."

"Stop, stop!" cried Albert Rohan, "the liberty which is stained with blood will never last."

"What would you have us do?" said one among them.

"Come to terms with the count, agree to pay him a reasonable price for his lands, and have done with this mockery of tribute-paying forever."

"We will not pay him a single franc," replied the people; and loudest among those who demanded freedom for all, were Pierre Baudouin and Jules Soyer.

And regardless of the voices of Albert Rohan and some few others who sought to restrain them, the yelling multitude dashed forward to the gate of the castle, seeking the life of the man who that morning stood unharmed and honored among them.

Albert and his more considerate companions followed them, seeking opportunity to soothe the storm. But Rohan had another and far weightier reason; he was in agony at the thought of the alarm Charlie would endure, and the rude shocks she might encounter in a castle filled with men infuriated against her class and kindred.

He had passed through a considerable part of the castle, trying in vain to prevent the crowd destroying the pictures and furniture that filled the rooms, when he heard the voices of several men sternly demanding where the count was, and promising safety to some one if his hiding-place should be revealed.

"But I know not where he is," replied a sweet voice, whose every tone thrilled on Albert's heart, and he immediately sprang forward to the aid of Charlie de Bosuet.

With little difficulty he freed the terrified girl from her interrogators, and by means of a secret passage, to which Charlie had been listening when the men arrested her, they made their way out of the castle on the farther side, where all was tranquil as of old. Hurrying along a lonely pathway to the town, whose deserted streets contrasted strangely with the scene of disorder they had quitted, Albert sought at once his mother's house, and confided Charlie to her care. Then, urged by the terrified girl's fears for the fate of her cousin and his gentle countess, he hastened back to the castle, from which the sounds of the tumult rose high on the summer air.

As he crossed the court-yard he met Jean Pauline escorting the countess, who was weeping bitterly, and entreating the life of her husband. But though no one answered her prayer, the majority stood aside with their heads uncovered and the deepest respect in their manner. With all their new-born hatred of her class, they could not forget that she had always been the friend of the poor and suffering.

Within the castle the hand of destruction had been already busy, and deafening shouts of men infuriated by their work of ruin, greeted Albert on every side. No tidings of the count's fate reached him, and he began to hope he had escaped, when, as it grew dark, a loud cry of triumph broke suddenly on his ear. He guessed at once its cause, and, hurrying on, found the lord of Chateaux-roux disarmed, in the hands of a couple of fierce peasants, who had just dragged him from behind the tapestry of an unused chamber. One held an axe upbrought to strike, when Albert, springing forward, caught his arm, and wrenching the weapon from him, pushed him staggering some paces back.

"Who are you that dares to come between my vengeance and the man who has wronged me?" demanded the peasant—the same who had first suggested the attack upon the castle.

"No matter who I am," said Albert, stepping before the count, who had shaken off his other captor. "I stand not by to see murder done; and you shall take my life ere you have his." It was not until within a room furnished sumptuously almost as his own castle, that the count, freed from immediate danger, seemed to recover from his paralyzing effects.

"Yes, I also owe my life to this brave youth," said he to Charlie, who came to welcome him to safety; "and now, poor and fugitive like my brother nobles, an exile's life is before me. And yet," he added, turning to Albert, "I believe I have that which will still repay all I owe to you."

Albert flushed to his very brow, and glanced at Charlie.

"Monsieur le Comte, you know well what I dare not ask."

"It shall never be said that a lord of Chateaux-roux knew not how to reward a service done him," said the count, with all the dignity of former days, as taking his cousin's hand, he placed it in that of the wealthy burgher, whose fortunes were now so much higher than his own.

Before morning the last lord of Chateaux-roux was miles away from his ancient castle, on his road to exile, and many years passed ere he trod the land of France again; but long ere that time Charlie had become the happy wife of the young merchant, and all Chateaux-roux had held high festival in honor of the union of the two classes.

HORRIBLE DEPRIVITY.—The Evansville (Ind.) Journal contains an account of the doings of a brute who lives near that place. He went into the woods a few mornings since, taking his dog and gun, and leaving locked up in his house a wife and child, dangerously ill, without food or water. About 10 o'clock at night the neighbors, alarmed by the groans of the woman and the cries of the child, burst open the door and found the woman in a dying condition. She expired in an hour after she was discovered, and just as her brutal husband returned. The child is likely to recover. The wife died of starvation and neglect, and the child was suffering from the same cause. The wretch who was the author of their suffering had no explanation to offer for his conduct.

FOR MURDER.—The Galena Advertiser notes the fact that a lad named George Jackson, aged twelve years, was committed to jail in that city, a day or two since, for the murder of a playmate, called Elias Horn, aged sixteen. Both boys were residents of Millville in that county. The two went to Apple River together; Jackson returned alone. In answer to inquiry for his companion, he said he was drowned. Search was made for the body, and it was found that the deceased had been shot, the ball entering his mouth. Jackson now says he shot him by snapping the gun at him, without knowing it to be loaded. His accusers think he killed him for a dollar and ten cents in his pockets at the time of the tragedy.

THE NUTMEG TREE.—At Bird's Valley and Eldorado Canon, this valuable tree is found in its greatest perfection. Trees are found here from eighteen to twenty-four inches in diameter and full of the fruit, which is contained in a covering like the coating of the English walnut. Before ripe it is soft and quite stringy, but when mature the covering opens and the nutmeg drops. The berries or nut ripens at various periods. Upon the same tree may be found ripe and green fruit. The ripe nutmeg is of the same form, and is as fully aromatic as the fruit from Sumatra. The foliage is like the pine or the hemlock, each leaf having, however, a sharp briar or thorn upon it. The fruit grows in clusters, similar to the cherry, and is indeed quite ornamental. This tree can be easily grown and will be quite an acquisition, and we trust ere long to see it generally cultivated.—Cal. Farmer.

THE MORTALITY AT LAMAR'S.—We had the pleasure yesterday of seeing Mr. Chas. Lamar, at whose hotel the dreadful mortality, by cholera, recently occurred. He assures us that the reports that have gone around the country, as to the condition of the cellar under his house, are wholly without foundation—that the cellar has in it a living spring of pure water, and that, on Friday before the disease broke out, it was cleaned and well lined. The fact that, when the sickness did occur, and during the confusion and alarm incident to such a severe blow, a few, say thirty or forty pounds of beef hung in the cellar, until it became tainted, and was speedily thrown out, gave rise to the wonderful exaggerations of which we have been made the victims.—Galena Jdg.

The Daily Gazette.

JANESVILLE : : : WISCONSIN.
TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 8, 1854.

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITON.—We give this morning the opinion of Chief Justice Whiton on the application of Mr. Booth for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from the custody of the U. S. district court, and to-morrow shall follow it with that of Judge Smith on the same application. The importance of the question involved, and the attempt to discredit the court for an alleged inconsistency between the decision in this case and its prior decision declaring the fugitive slave law unconstitutional, will commend these opinions to a general and careful perusal. We think the court will be fully sustained in the later as well as earlier decision.

THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.—The fraud in this bill was designed to benefit the Illinois Central railroad company, by putting the control of the donated lands into the hands of the owners of that road and enabling them to extend it from Dubuque into Minnesota. The alteration in the bill is said to have been discovered by the secretary of the territory, who was on a flying visit to Washington. The particular individuals to be benefitted are also said to be Robert Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Erasmus Corning, George L. Schuyler, (Robert's brother,) Edward Dement, (Ketchum's partner,) William P. Burall, (treasurer of the Illinois Central,) R. B. Mason, (chief engineer,) John M. Forbes of Boston, and John Gardiner, (brother-in-law to John Tyler.)

This company (the Illinois Central) has been one of the most active and powerful interests in opposition to the Valley road and its efforts to obtain a grant of the public lands. The disinterested nature of its hostility and the sincerity of its denunciations of the "frauds" of the latter may be judged by this specimen of its own dealings.

The accusation of the Janesville Gazette that we have gained notoriety or honors under a pretense of aiding in the rescue of Glover, or that we wish to avoid an issue with the federal court, is unwarranted and unjust. Neither by word nor deed have we pretended that we did any more than we actually did, and we have always declared that we did not aid in the rescue of Glover, and that we were not legally liable in an action for his escape. It is not possible for our brethren of the press to be just to us, but must they wound us, as though they were themselves slave-catchers, and felt jealous of everybody whom the kidnappers were pursuing?

It is talk about forcible resistance to the last decision of the supreme court we can't understand, because there is nothing in it to resist. They simply refused to grant us the writ of habeas corpus, and to talk of resisting such a denial is ridiculous. At least, we can't comprehend it. But we can comprehend that it is the right of the people to resist the execution of the fugitive act, now that it has been declared unconstitutional by our highest state court, for it is not only the doctrine of common sense, but Justice Smith and Justice McLean and six jurists, declare that no one can deny the right of the people to resist an unconstitutional act. It is simply a question of expediency. That's all.—Free Democrat.

We have no disposition to "horn" Mr. Booth, or misrepresent him, but we have thought that himself and some of his friends were disposed to make too much of what seemed to us a personal disappointment, and too ready to assail a court which had shown itself fearless in the discharge of what its members regarded a legal duty. We still think the columns of the Free Democrat evince this disposition, and we can assure Mr. Booth that we are not alone in this opinion. Many others who by no means can be justly characterized as his enemies, are not at all reluctant to so express themselves. In looking for a motive for his conduct in this matter, it is possible we assigned a wrong one, and we are willing to take his denial of the one imputed to him.

The inapplicability to us of the Democrat's talk about "forcible resistance" would be apparent if it had given its readers a chance to see what we did say. It was Mr. Booth's friends who encouraged "resistance," and we agree with the Free Democrat that it is "ridiculous" to entertain any such idea, so far as the last decision of the supreme court is concerned, and is wholly unnecessary in reference to the fugitive slave law, until the supreme court of the United States overrules the decision of the court of this state. We have no sort of fear that a fugitive will be carried out of this state while that decision stands, and we don't believe a "forcible resistance" of the law will be required to prevent it. As "a question of expediency" we think we had better try now for a repeal of the law, and elect members of congress and United States senators who will vote to wipe it from the statute book, and thereby avoid all occasion for violence and mobs.

VERMONT.—There is at present but one anti-Nebraska ticket in this state, Mr. Walton having withdrawn in favor of Judge Royce, and Mr. Shafter in favor of Mr. Fletcher. We hope no other will be run, and thus let the people of the state pass upon the issue before them without being distracted by a multiplicity of candidates believing and thinking alike. Henry M. Bates, of Washington county, is on the ticket for treasurer with Messrs. Royce and Fletcher.

LISE DOWN.—The telegraph wire is down between Whitewater and Milwaukee, and we are consequently without a report. This accident is the more provoking, as the Atlantic arrived in New York Saturday, with four days later news from Europe, and we were in hopes of getting something further from Washington as to the closing business of the session.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION of the northern district is called at Waupun on Tuesday, the 3d of October.

Opinion of Chief Justice Whiton.

The State of Wisconsin—Supreme Court.
In the matter of the application of Sherman M. Booth for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

We think that this application must be denied. The petitioner states in his petition for the writ, that he is imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Milwaukee; and that the cause or pretence of his commitment to the said jail, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is a warrant from Andrew G. Miller, judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; a copy of which warrant is annexed to the petition. The petitioner states further, that the indictment mentioned in the said warrant is founded upon a pretended violation of the fugitive slave act of '50 which he represents as unconstitutional and void. The warrant annexed to the petition commands the marshal of the district to take the petitioner and him safely keep so that he should have his body before the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, forthwith to answer to an indictment pending in said court against him, for aiding and abetting and assisting the escape of Joshua Glover from the custody of Charles C. Cotton, a deputy marshal. The warrant is tested in the name of the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; is sealed with the seal of that court, and signed by its clerk. In the case of Ableman vs. the state of Wisconsin, ex rel. Booth, decided at the present term of the court, we held that the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus by a state magistrate authorized to issue the writ, to bring before him a person who had been committed by a commissioner of the United States, for refusing to enter into a recognizance with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States to answer for an alleged offence, and the discharge of the prisoner so committed, did not interfere with the jurisdiction of that court. But we said distinctly that when a court had obtained jurisdiction of a case, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction would interfere, and that when the jurisdiction of a court was exclusive, no other court could take jurisdiction at all. We supposed this to be a familiar principle, which would be denied by no one.

We are still of this opinion, and if the present application for the writ showed that the petitioner was in confinement for refusing to recognize with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States for this district, in obedience to the order of a commissioner, or other inferior magistrate, we should not hesitate to issue the writ. But the facts set forth in the petition for the writ, show that the petitioner is in confinement by force of a warrant issued by the court, and that the object of imprisonment is to compel him to answer to an indictment now pending against him therein. These facts show that the district court of the United States has obtained jurisdiction of the case, and it is apparent that the indictment pending against the petitioner is for an offence of which the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. We do not see, therefore, how we can consistently with the principles of our former decision, interfere. It is true, that we are not asked to take the case from the district court of the United States, and try the petitioner for the offence with which he is charged but we are asked to remove him from the custody of that court and discharge him, if, in our opinion, his imprisonment is illegal. In other words, we are called upon to do an act which would prevent the court of the United States from proceeding to try and determine a case now pending before it, and of which it has exclusive jurisdiction. For without the custody of its prisoner, that court can not proceed to a trial of him for the alleged offence. But it is said by the petitioner, that the act of congress, for violating which he is indicted, is void, for the reason that it is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that consequently the petition shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. And it is further claimed by him, that the district court of the United States can not obtain jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding when the facts show that no court can have jurisdiction to try a person for an alleged violation of a void statute. Hence the petitioner concludes that by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, and discharging him from custody, we should not disturb the jurisdiction of the district court, for the very obvious reason that it never acquired jurisdiction. But it is to be remembered that that court, having the case pending before it, is of necessity compelled to decide every question which the case involves—that of its own jurisdiction included. It must therefore retain the case in order to decide that, as well as every other question that may arise. No state court can therefore interfere.

The application must be denied.

WHITON, C. Justice.

THE FREE PRESS comments upon our article of Thursday in reference to the nomination of Mr. Walton for governor in Vermont. We suppose our neighbor had his article prepared and put in type before he saw our reply of Saturday to the Free Democrat, and could not afford to lose so much matter for his paper. No harm done; so let it "pass."

A TROUBLED FETTER.—The Providence Journal says: "It was rather a sad sight to see a man of Mr. Benton's position apply the term 'dirty dog' to a senator in congress. It was a sadder sight to see the senator prove on the floor of the senate that even so indecorous and vulgar a phrase was not misplaced."

THE UNITED STATES SENATE voted last week Monday to grant a pension to the widow of James Bachelder, the deputy marshal killed in Boston in the Burns' riot. The vote stood 35 to 14—senator Dodge of this state voting in the affirmative and senator Walker in the negative. The entire negative vote was as follows: Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Stuart, Thompson of Ky., Wade, Walker.

PROF. COMSTOCK AGAIN.—In alluding to this "distinguished gentleman" as the "fiscal agent" of several Milwaukee railroads, we supposed his professed connection with them was merely one of his own peculiarly modest announcements, and that the Morning News was happily selected as a very proper "medium" to introduce him to the public in his newly-assumed capacity; but we learn from the Sentinel that he has really ingratiated himself into the confidence of some persons in that city "interested in some of our (Milwaukee) roads," and been entrusted with some sort of a mission for their benefit to the "rich old farmers of Dutchess county." After this, we think our Milwaukee friends may as well stop talking about "moon-shine" or "gas" in connection with railroad matters.

NEWSPAPER ARCHIV

NEWSPAPER ARCHIVE

MEETING OF THE COMMON COUNCIL.—At the meeting of the council last Saturday evening the principal business transacted was to declare void the contract with Messrs. Hume & Rague for building the Milwaukee street bridge, and authorizing the bridge committee to let a new one for its construction. It was also decided to levy and collect a tax the present year to pay for it. A petition from various citizens to make the bridge as nearly level as practicable was referred to a select committee.

OAK HILL CEMETERY.—At a meeting of the trustees of this cemetery association last Saturday evening it was resolved to build a dwelling house inside the enclosure for the use of a sexton.

SHEET MUSIC.—Our musical friends will find a very excellent assortment of music, arranged for the piano, harp and other instruments, at Mr. Sutherland's book-store. He is also constantly receiving all the new pieces as soon as published. See his advertisement.

NEW PAPER.—Messrs. Baker & Doty, of the Free Press, propose to publish a semi-monthly "miscellaneous and reformatory journal," to be called "The Wisconsin Home," under the editorial charge of Mr. Doty. Price $1 per year. "We wish the new paper all the success it merits," as our neighbors said of ourselves when we improved the looks of the Gazette.

MR. HUNTER'S LAND BILL.—We are yet without advice from Washington as to the fate of the homestead bill as amended in the senate by Mr. Hunter. In addition to the homestead provisions heretofore given, it makes a donation to the states of alternate sections of land in aid of railroads chartered by the states, and allows states to purchase lands within their limits on the same terms as individuals.

CHOLERA.—We learn that two Norwegian emigrants died with cholera at the depot Sunday night. Three others attacked recovered. The company were bound to Koskonong, and have since left the city.

VOTE ON THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.—The following is the vote in the senate on the passage of the river and harbor bill:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge, (Wis.) Dodge, (Iowa) Fessenden, Fish, Ford, Grier, Gillette, James, Johnson, Jones, (Iowa), Jones, (Tenn.), Pearce, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Sill, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson, (Ky.), Thompson, (N. J.), Wade, Walker.—31.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Brown, Chy, Dawson, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Tombs, Williams.—17.

Of the yeas, 15 were whigs and free soilers, and of the nays all but one democrats. The ultimate fate of the bill is not yet known, though no one doubts that the president vetoed or pocketed it, if it survived the committee of conference and got through both houses.

INHALATION.

A cure for Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Heart and Liver.

DR. THOMAS H. GREENHOUGH, late of London, England, resident Physician of New Orleans, for the above specialities, respectfully informs the citizens of Janesville that he will remain a few days at the MERCHANTS' HOTEL, to afford those of the afflicted who may desire it, an opportunity of availing themselves of Inhalation, the only reliable process of cure.

The consideration of the connection between mind and body, and the influence of nature's laws upon the constitution of man, constitutes a very essential part of Dr. Greenough's practice, and governs him in the administration of remedies, which are numerous and varied, to suit the peculiar condition of each case.

His plan of living (a hygienic sheet) embraces not only the kind of food and drink, but the kind of bath, exercise, dress, &c., most congenial to the organism of the patient.

After Dr. Greenough's departure, Dr. Hays McKinley, resident Physician of Kenosha, will attend to those who may place themselves under the care of Dr. G., who will shortly return to New Orleans to resume his practice.

A TALE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

[Concluded from yesterday.]

The count received the procession with stately courtesy, as his predecessors had done for many generations. The widow of Chateauxroux then offered to kneel before the count in token of submission; but he gracefully prevented her, and, raising his plumed hat, saluted her accordingly to the fashion of the time, by ceremoniously kissing her on each cheek, and without knowing her story, he gazed with interest on her wan beauty, as she modestly performed her part in payment by presenting herself in the name of the inhabitants of Chateauxroux with the usual commutation for their tax.

The count answered the beautiful bride—whose sorrows he guessed not—courteously, and more graciously and kindly than he had been wont to treat her predecessors; a stout, cherry-checked dame, who on such occasions had always appeared to feel herself a person of the utmost importance. Then drawing off his left glove, and holding it by the points of the fingers in the right hand, he raised it, and striking lightly the vase of roses on Lucille's head, already loosened by her attendant maids, it fell to the ground, and was dashed to a thousand pieces, while the band struck up a triumphant air, and the crowd cheered loudly.

All the members of the procession, and also the count, maintained their places, waiting until silence should be restored, that the lord of Chateauxroux might, according to custom, declare the tax remitted for the past year. But just as the last strains of the music were dying away, and the count had raised his hand to speak, the hitherto passive bride shrieked wildly. It seemed to her excited mind that the pale, wan shade of one long dead stood before her; and welcoming to her as a message from the other world sent to her from the heavy burthen of life, she sprang quickly forward; and crying, "Claude! Claude! take me with you!" threw herself on the stranger's bosom, while the bridal veil swept over both, and the wreath of orange, blossoms fell on his breast.

But it was a living and loving heart on which Lucille cast herself, though she had so long believed it cold and still. For it was another Mornand who had fallen beneath the dagger of a stranger, though owing to the confusion at that time reigning in Paris, it had been erroneously stated to be Claude Mornand of Chateauxroux; while Claude himself, arrested the very evening of his arrival in Paris, as an accomplice in some conspiracy, of whose very existence he was ignorant, had for three years suffered a living death in one of the crowded prisons of Paris, unable to send a single word or token of his safety to her he loved. At length, after many difficulties and dangers, he had escaped with the Count of Lienne, had conducted him to Chateauxroux, and was on his way to seek Jean Pauline, and bid him break the tidings of his safety to Lucille, when she rushed forward and threw herself into his arms.

"I congratulate you on your return to life and to your friends," said Jean Pauline, approaching Mornand. "Yes, and to one of the best of wives and mothers, notwithstanding this veil," he added, raising the veil which Mornand had refrained from touching. And he rapidly detailed to him the persecution by which Lucille had become a second time a bride.

"Kindly treatment, in truth, for the widow and the fatherless!" said Mornand bitterly; and when some of his former acquaintances came, not without embarrassment, to welcome him back, he turned from them indignantly. "And now, Monsieur le Comte," said Pierre Baudoin, soon after the conclusion of the last scene, in which the count had shown a great interest, "will it please you to declare the tax remitted for the year?"

"It is not remitted," coldly answered the lord of Chateauxroux, the graciousness he had evinced throughout the morning having vanished at the sight of the stately form of Albert Rohan mingling in the crowd. "The conditions on which alone exemption was granted have not been fulfilled, and the tax remains in force."

"But we cannot fulfill them," said Jules Soyere, eagerly. "We have done all we could do to compass it; and it is not our fault that, after all, Madame Mornand was not a widow."

"No; I doubt not that, for your own interests, you would as willingly have made her a widow as a wife," said the count ironically. "But know that it is not for this deed, nor for others not much better," he haughtily added, glancing towards Albert, "that you need expect favor at the hands of the lord of Chateauxroux."

"Favor!" echoed from lip to lip, but reached not the count's ears.

"Therefore, on the morrow my steward will proceed to the examination of your property, and the collection of the title of its value," resumed the count, loftily addressing the assembled burghers, who stood in silence of astonishment at the extent to which the count was about to push his claim, "which," and Albert fancied the noble's eye again fell on him, "will form the dowry of my cousin, Mademoiselle de Bosuet, on her approaching marriage with the Count de Trouville."

Albert Rohan felt his blood boil at this last remark; and so did many an other at the insulting scrutiny and loss with which his property was threatened.

"Men of Chateauxroux, will you bear this?" exclaimed Albert Rohan.

"Never! never!" cried twenty voices from the younger portion of the crowd.

"We bore too much when we stood by and saw a woman sacrificed to save the gold for which our fathers toiled!" said one of them. "Better have broken the yoke at once, and freed all from such bondage."

"I don't see why the count should take advantage of our misfortunes," muttered Baudoin, suddenly becoming an advocate for equity. "Shame on you if you submit to it!" cries a bold spirit in the crowd. "Shall the men of Chateauxroux alone be slaves, with all other Frenchmen free?"

"We will be free! we will be like the other men of France!" burst in an almost unanimous response from the more youthful burghers.

"Let us seize the castle, and revenge all our wrongs upon the count!" cried one, whom in other days the lord of Chateauxroux had treated with injustice. "He has been a hard master to many of us, and we have nothing but evil to repay to him."

"Stop, stop!" cried Albert Rohan, "the liberty which is stained with blood will never last."

"What would you have us do?" said one among them.

"Come to terms with the count, agree to pay him a reasonable price for his lands, and have done with this mockery of tribute-paying forever."

"We will not pay him a single franc," replied the people; and louder among those who demanded freedom for all, were Pierre Baudoin and Jules Soyere.

And regardless of the voices of Albert Rohan and some few others who sought to restrain them, the yelling multitude dashed forward to the gate of the castle, seeking the life of the man who that morning had stood unharmed and honored among them.

Albert and his more considerate companions followed them, seeking opportunity to soothe the storm. But Rohan had another and far weightier reason; he was in agony at the thought of the alarm Clotie would endure, and the rule shocks she might encounter in a castle filled with men infuriated against her class and kindred.

He had passed through a considerable part of the castle, trying in vain to prevent the crowd destroying the pictures and furniture that filled the rooms, when he heard the voices of several men sternly demanding where the count was and promising safety to come one if his hiding-place should be revealed.

"But I know not where he is," replied a sweet voice, whose every tone thrilled on Albert's heart, and he immediately sprang forward to the aid of Clotie de Bosuet.

With little difficulty he freed the terrified girl from her interrogators, and by means of a secret passage, to which Clotie had been hastening when the men arrested her, they made their way out of the castle on the farther side, where all was tranquil as of old. Hurrying along a lonely pathway to the town, whose deserted streets contrasted strangely with the scene of disorder they had quitted, Albert sought at once his mother's house, and confided Clotie to her care. Then, urged by the terrified girl's fears for the fate of her cousin and his gentle countess, he hastened back to the castle, from which the sounds of the tumult rose high on the summer air.

As he crossed the court-yard he met Jean Pauline escorting the countess, who was weeping bitterly, and entreating the life of her husband. But though no one answered her prayer, the majority stood aside with their heads uncovered and the deepest respect in their manner. With all their new-born hatred of her class, they could not forget that she had always been the friend of the poor and suffering.

Within the castle the land of destruction had been already busy, and deafening shouts of men infuriated by their work of ruin, greeted Albert on every side. No tidings of the count's fate reached him, and he began to hope he had escaped, when, as it grew dark, a loud cry of triumph broke suddenly on his ear. He guessed at once its cause, and, hurrying on, found the lord of Chateauxroux disarmed, in the hands of a couple of fierce peasants, who had just dragged him from behind the tapestry of an unused chamber. One held an axe uplied to strike, when Albert, springing forward, caught his arm, and wrenching the weapon from him, pushed him staggering some paces back.

"Who are you that dares to come between my vengeance and the man who has wronged me?" demanded the peasant—the same who had first suggested the attack upon the castle.

"No matter who I am," said Albert, stepping before the count, who had shaken off his other captor. "I stand not by to see murder done; and you shall take my life ere you have his." It was not until within a room furnished sumptuously almost as his own castle, that the count, freed from immediate danger, seemed to recover from its paralyzing effects.

"Yes, I also owe my life to this brave youth," said he to Clotie, who came to welcome him to safety; "and now, poor and fugitive like my brother nobles, an exile's life is before me. And yet," he added, turning to Albert, "I believe I have that which will still repay all I owe to you."

Albert flushed at his very brow, and glanced at Clotie. "Monsieur le Comte, you know well what I dare not ask."

"It shall never be said that a lord of Chateauxroux knew not how to reward a service done him," said the count, with all the dignity of former days, as taking his cousin's hand, he placed it in that of the wealthy burgher, whose fortunes were now so much higher than his own.

Before morning the last lord of Chateauxroux was miles away from his ancient castle, on his road to exile, and many years passed ere he touched the land of France again; but long ere that time Clotie had become the happy wife of the young merchant, and all Chateauxroux had held high festival in honor of the union of the two classes.

HORRIBLE DEPRIVATION.—The Evansville (Ind.) Journal contains an account of the doings of a brute who lives near that place. He went into the woods a few mornings since, taking his dog and gun, and leaving locked up in his house a wife and child, dangerously ill, without food or water. About 10 o'clock at night the neighbors, alarmed by the groans of the woman and the cries of the child, burst open the door and found the woman in a dying condition. She expired in an hour afterwards was discovered, and just as her brutal husband returned. The child is likely to recover. The wife died of starvation and neglect, and the child was suffering from the same cause. The wretch who was the author of their suffering had no explanation to offer for his conduct.

FOR MURDER.—The Galena Advertiser notes the fact that a lad named George Jackson, aged twelve years, was committed to jail in that city, a day or two since, for the murder of a playmate, called Elias Horn, aged sixteen. Both boys were residents of Millville in that county. The two went to Apple river together; Jackson returned alone. In answer to inquiry for his companion, he said he was drowned. Search was made for the body, and it was found that the deceased had been shot, the ball entering his mouth. Jackson now says he shot him by snapping the gun at him, without knowing it to be loaded. His accusers think he killed him for a dollar and ten cents in his pockets at the time of the tragedy.

THE NUTMEG TREE.—At Bird's Valley and El Dorado Canon, this valuable tree is found in its greatest perfection. Trees are found here from eighteen to twenty-four inches in diameter and full of the fruit, which is contained in a covering like the coating of the English walnut. Before ripe it is soft and quite stringy, but when mature the covering opens and the nutmeg drops. The berries or nut ripens at various periods. Upon the same tree may be found ripe and green fruit. The ripe nutmeg is of the same form, and is as fully aromatic as the fruit from Sumatra. The foliage is like the pine or the hemlock, each leaf having, however, a sharp briar or thorn upon it. The fruit grows in clusters, similar to the cherry, and is indeed quite ornamental. This tree can be easily grown and will be quite an acquisition, and we trust are long to see it generally cultivated.—Cal. Farmer.

THE MORTALITY AT LAMAR'S.—We had the pleasure yesterday of seeing Mr. Chas. Lannar, at whose hotel the dreadful mortality, by cholera, recently occurred. He assures us that the reports that have gone around the country, as to the condition of the cellar under his house, are wholly without foundation—that the cellar has in it a living spring of pure water, and that, on Friday before the disease broke out, it was cleaned and well lined. The fact that, when the sickness did occur, and during the confusion and alarm incident to such a severe blow, a few, say thirty or forty pounds of beef hung in the cellar, until it became tainted, and was speedily thrown out, gave rise to the wonderful exaggerations of which we have been made the victims.—Galena Jeff.

The Daily Gazette.

JANESVILLE : : : : WISCONSIN.
TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 8, 1851.

OPINION OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITON.—We give this morning the opinion of Chief Justice Whiton on the application of Mr. Booth for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge him from the custody of the U. S. district court, and to-morrow shall follow it with that of Judge Smith on the same application. The importance of the question involved, and the attempt to discredit the court for an alleged inconsistency between the decision in this case and its prior decision declaring the fugitive slave law unconstitutional, will commend these opinions to a general and careful perusal. We think the court will be fully sustained in the later as well as earlier decision.

THE MINNESOTA LAND BILL.—The fraud in this bill was designed to benefit the Illinois Central railroad company, by putting the control of the donated lands into the hands of the owners of that road and enabling them to extend it from Dubuque into Minnesota. The attention in the bill is said to have been discovered by the secretary of the territory, who was on a flying visit to Washington. The particular individuals to be benefitted are also said to be Robert Schuyler, Morris Ketchum, Erasmus Corning, George L. Schuyler, (Robert's brother,) Edward Bement, (Ketchum's partner,) William P. Burral, (treasurer of the Illinois Central,) R. B. Mason, (chief engineer,) John M. Forbes of Boston, and John Gardiner, (brother-in-law to John Tyler.)

This company (the Illinois Central) has been one of the most active and powerful interests in opposition to the Valley road and its efforts to obtain a grant of the public lands. The disinterested nature of its hostility and the sincerity of its denunciations of the "frauds" of the latter may be judged by this specimen of its own dealings.

The accusation of the Janesville Gazette that we have gained notoriety or honors under a pretense of aiding in the rescue of Glover, or that we wish to avoid an issue with the federal court, is unwarranted and unjust. Neither by word nor deed have we pretended that we did any more than we actually did, and we have always declared that we did not aid in the rescue of Glover, and that we were not legally liable in an action for his escape. Is it not possible for our brethren of the press to be just to us, but must they hound us, as though they were themselves slave-catchers, and felt jealous of everybody whom the kidnappers were pursuing?

It is talk about forcible resistance to the last decision of the supreme court we can't understand, because there is nothing in it to resist. They simply refused to grant us the writ of habeas corpus, and to talk of resisting such a denial is ridiculous. At least, we can't comprehend it. But we can comprehend that it is the right of the people to resist the execution of the fugitive act, now that it has been declared unconstitutional by our highest state court, for it is not only the doctrine of common sense, but Justice Smith and Justice McLean and all just men, declare that no one can deny the right of the people to resist an unconstitutional act. It is simply a question of expediency. That's all.—Free Democrat.

We have no disposition to "horm" Mr. Booth, or misrepresent him, but we have thought that himself and some of his friends were disposed to make too much of what seemed to us a personal disappointment, and too ready to assail a court which had shown itself fearless in the discharge of what its members regarded a legal duty. We still think the columns of the Free Democrat evince this disposition, and we can assure Mr. Booth that we are not alone in this opinion. Many others who by no means can be justly characterized as his enemies, are not at all reluctant to so express themselves. In looking for a motive for his conduct in this matter, it is possible we assigned a wrong one, and we are willing to take his denial of the one imputed to him.

The inapplicability to us of the Democrat's talk about "forcible resistance" would be apparent if it had given its readers a chance to see what we did say. It was Mr. Booth's friends who encouraged "resistance," and we agree with the Free Democrat that it is "ridiculous" to entertain any such idea, so far as the last decision of the supreme court is concerned, and is wholly unnecessary in reference to the fugitive slave law, until the supreme court of the United States overrules the decision of the court of this state. We have no sort of fear that a fugitive will be carried out of this state while that decision stands, and we don't believe a "forcible resistance" of the law will be required to prevent it. As "a question of expediency" we think we had better try now for a repeal of the law, and elect members of congress and United States senators who will vote to wipe it from the statute book, and thereby avoid all occasion for violence and mobs.

VERMONT.—There is at present but one anti-Nebraska ticket in this state, Mr. Walton having withdrawn in favor of Judge Royce, and Mr. Shafter in favor of Mr. Fletcher. We hope no other will be run, and thus let the people of the state pass upon the issue before them without being distracted by a multiplicity of candidates believing and thinking alike. Henry M. Bates, of Washington county, is on the ticket for treasurer with Messrs. Royce and Fletcher.

LINE DOWNS.—The telegraph wire is down between Whitewater and Milwaukee, and we are consequently without a report. This accident is the more provoking, as the Atlantic arrived in New York Saturday, with four days later news from Europe, and we were in hopes of getting something further from Washington as to the closing business of the session.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION of the northern district is called at Wausau on Tuesday, the 24 of October.

Opinion of Chief Justice Whiton.

The State of Wisconsin—Supreme Court.
In the matter of the application of Sherman M. Booth for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

We think that this application must be denied. The petitioner states in his petition for the writ, that he is imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Milwaukee; and that the cause or pretence of his commitment to the said jail, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is a warrant from Andrew G. Miller, judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; a copy of which warrant is annexed to the petition. The petitioner states further, that the indictment mentioned in the said warrant is founded upon a pretended violation of the fugitive slave act of '50 which he represents as unconstitutional and void. The warrant annexed to the petition commands the marshal of the district to take the petitioner and him safely keep so that he should have his body before the district court of the United States for the district of Wisconsin, forthwith to answer to an indictment pending in said court against him, for aiding and abetting and assisting the escape of Joshua Glover from the custody of Charles C. Cotton, a deputy marshal. The warrant is tested in the name of the judge of the district court of the United States, for the district of Wisconsin; is sealed with the seal of that court, and signed by its clerk. In the case of Abdennur vs. the state of Wisconsin, ex rel. Booth, decided at the present term of the court, we held that the issuing of a writ of habeas corpus by a state magistrate authorized to issue the writ, to bring before him a person who had been committed by a commissioner of the United States, for refusing to enter into a recognizance with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States to answer for an alleged offence, and the discharge of the prisoner so committed, did not interfere with the jurisdiction of that court. But we said distinctly that when a court had obtained jurisdiction of a case, no other court of concurrent jurisdiction would interfere, and that when the jurisdiction of a court was exclusive, no other court could take jurisdiction at all. We supposed this to be a familiar principle, which would be denied by no one.

We are still of this opinion, and if the present application for the writ showed that the petitioner was in confinement for refusing to recognize with sureties for his appearance before the district court of the United States for this district, in obedience to the order of a commissioner, or other inferior magistrate, we should not hesitate to issue the writ. But the facts set forth in the petition for the writ, show that the petitioner is in confinement by force of a warrant issued by the court, and that the object of imprisonment is to compel him to answer to an indictment now pending against him therein.—These facts show that the district court of the United States has obtained jurisdiction of the case, and it is apparent that the indictment pending against the petitioner is for an offence of which the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. We do not see, therefore, how we can consistently with the principles of our former decision, interfere. It is true, that we are not asked to take the case from the district court of the United States, and try the petitioner for the offence with which he is charged but we are asked to remove him from the custody of that court and discharge him, if, in our opinion, his imprisonment is illegal. In other words, we are called upon to do an act which would prevent the court of the United States from proceeding to try and determine a case now pending before it, and of which it has exclusive jurisdiction. For without the custody of its prisoner, that court can not proceed to a trial of him for the alleged offence. But it is said by the petitioner, that the act of congress, for violating which he is indicted, is void, for the reason that it is repugnant to the constitution of the United States, and that consequently the petition shows that no offence has been committed by the petitioner. And it is further claimed by him, that the district court of the United States can not obtain jurisdiction of a criminal proceeding when the facts show that no court can have jurisdiction to try a person for an alleged violation of a void statute.—Hence the petitioner concludes that by issuing a writ of habeas corpus, and discharging him from custody, we should not disturb the jurisdiction of the district court, for the very obvious reason that it never acquired jurisdiction. But it is to be remembered that that court, having the case pending before it, is of necessity compelled to decide every question which the case involves—that of its own jurisdiction included. It must therefore retain the case in order to decide that, as well as every other question that may arise. No state court can therefore interfere.

The application must be denied.
WHITON, C. Justice.

THE FREE PRESS comments upon our article of Thursday in reference to the nomination of Mr. Walton for governor in Vermont. We suppose our neighbor had his article prepared and put in type before he saw our reply of Saturday to the Free Democrat, and could not afford to lose so much matter for his paper. No harm done; so let it "pass."

A TRAIT FIT.—The Providence Journal says: "It was rather a sad sight to see a man of Mr. Benton's position apply the term 'dirty dog' to a senator in congress. It was a sadder sight to see the senator prove on the floor of the senate that even so indecorous and vulgar a phrase was not misplaced."

THE UNITED STATES SENATE voted last week Monday to grant a pension to the widow of James Bachelder, the deputy marshal killed in Boston in the Burns' riot. The vote stood 35 to 14—senator Dodge of this state voting in the affirmative and senator Walker in the negative. The entire negative vote was as follows: Messrs. Bright, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Stuart, Thompson of Ky., Wade, Walker.

PROF. COMSTOCK AGAIN.—In alluding to this "distinguished gentleman" as the "fiscal agent" of several Milwaukee railroads, we supposed his professed connection with them was merely one of his own peculiarly modest announcements, and that the Morning News was happily selected as a very proper "medium" to introduce him to the public in his newly-assumed capacity; but we learn from the Sentinel that he has really ingratiated himself into the confidence of some persons in that city "interested in some of our (Milwaukee) roads," and been entrusted with some sort of a mission for their benefit to the "rich old farmers of Dutchess county." After this, we think our Milwaukee friends may as well stop talking about "moon-shine" or "gas" in connection with railroad matters.

THE DAILY GAZETTE.

MEETING OF THE COMMON COUNCIL.—At the meeting of the council last Saturday evening the principal business transacted was to declare void the contract with Messrs. Hume & Rague for building the Milwaukee street bridge, and authorizing the bridge committee to let a new one for its construction. It was also decided to levy and collect a tax the present year to pay for it. A petition from various citizens to make the bridge as nearly level as practicable was referred to a select committee.

OAK HILL CEMETERY.—At a meeting of the trustees of this cemetery association last Saturday evening it was resolved to build a dwelling house inside the enclosure for the use of a sexton.

SHORT MUSIC.—Our musical friends will find a very excellent assortment of music, arranged for the piano, harp and other instruments, at Mr. Sutherland's book-store. He is also constantly receiving all the new pieces as soon as published. See his advertisement.

NEW PAPER.—Messrs. Baker & Doty, of the Free Press, propose to publish a semi-monthly "miscellaneous and reformatory journal," to be called "The Wisconsin Home," under the editorial charge of Mr. Doty. Price $1 per year. "We wish the new paper all the success it merits," as our neighbors said of ourselves when we improved the looks of the Gazette.

MR. HUNTER'S LAND BILL.—We are yet without advice from Washington as to the fate of the homestead bill as amended in the senate by Mr. Hunter. In addition to the homestead provisions heretofore given, it makes a donation to the states of alternate sections of land in aid of railroads chartered by the states, and allows states to purchase lands within their limits on the same terms as individuals.

CHOLERA.—We learn that two Norwegian emigrants died with cholera at the depot Sunday night. Three others attacked recovered. The company were bound to Kaskong, and have since left the city.

VOTE OF THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.—The following is the vote in the senate on the passage of the river and harbor bill:

YEAS.—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Cass, Chase, Cooper, Dodge, (Wis.) Dodge, (Iowa) Fessenden, Fish, Ford, Grier, Gillette, James, Johnson, Jones, (Iowa), Jones, (Tenn.), Pearce, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusch, Schastin, Seward, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson, (Ky.), Thompson, (N. Y.), Wade, Walker, (N. Y.), Williams, (N. Y.), Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Brown, Clay, Dawson, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Morton, Norris, Toumbs, Williams.—17

Of the yeas, 15 were whigs and free soilers, and of the nays all but one democrats. The ultimate fate of the bill is not yet known, though no one doubts that the president vetoed or pocketed it, if it survived the committee of conference and got through both houses.

INHALATION.

A Cure for Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, and all Diseases of the Throat, Lungs, Heart and Liver.

DR. THOMAS H. GREENHOUGH.—Late of London, England, resident Physician of New Orleans, for the above specialties, respectfully informs the citizens of Janesville, and begs to remind a few days at the MERCHANTS' HOTEL, to afford those of the afflicted who may desire it, an opportunity of availing themselves of Inhalation, the only reliable process of cure.

The consideration of the connection between mind and body, and the influence of nature's laws upon the constitution of man, constitutes a very essential part of Dr. Greenough's practice, and governs him in the administration of remedies, which are numerous and varied, to suit the peculiar condition of each case. The plan of Inhalation (a hygienic system) embraces not only the kind of food and drink, but the kind of bath, exercise, dress, &c., most congenial to the organism of the patient.

After Dr. Greenough's departure, Dr. Hays McKinley, resident Physician at Kenosha, will attend to those who may place themselves under the care of Dr. G., who will shortly return to New Orleans to resume his practice.

Consultation free. Office at the Merchants' Hotel.
